PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 103^d CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE—Tuesday, January 5, 1993

The fifth day of January being the day prescribed by House Concurrent Resolution 384 for the meeting of the 1st session of the 103d Congress, the Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol, at 12 noon.

The Senate was called to order by the Vice President.

PRAYER

The Reverend Richard C. Halverson, Jr., Falls Church, VA, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

Eternal God, Lord of history, Ruler of nature and the nations, Your everlasting Word declares, "* * * there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God." (Romans 13:1) As we open the 103d Congress, and Your servants accept the mantle of divine obligation, we hear these words not as religious trivia but as the bedrock foundation upon which our Republic rests—a government instituted among men to secure the human rights endowed by a Creator God, receiving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

Mighty God, let us begin in this conviction and fulfill our obligation. So we believe. So we open the 103d Congress. In the name of God. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate 2 letters of resignation, 2 certificates of appointment, 2 certificates of election for unexpired terms, and the credentials of 34 Senators elected for 6-year terms beginning on January 3, 1993.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The VICE PRESIDENT. The majority leader is recognized.

WELCOME TO COLLEAGUES AND BEST WISHES TO THE CHAPLAIN

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I begin by welcoming all of our colleagues and by taking note of the fact that the prayer today was given by the Reverend Richard Halverson, Jr., the son of the Senate Chaplain. I know that every Senator joins me in extending our best wishes to the Senate Chaplain, Reverend Halverson, a highly respected and beloved member of this institution.

CONTESTING ELECTIONS IN GEORGIA AND OREGON

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, before the Chair asks that Senators-elect present themselves to be sworn in, I would like to make a brief statement. The Senate has received petitions from citizens contesting the elections of the Senators-elect from Georgia and from Oregon.

A lawsuit is pending in the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Georgia in which the plaintiffs allege that Georgia's runoff statute violates Federal election law and the U.S. Constitution, and that Senator Fowler should be declared the winner based on his victory at the general election on November 3, 1992. Some of the plaintiffs in that lawsuit have petitioned the Senate to resolve the legal issue itself and seat Senator Fowler as the lawful winner of that election. In the alternative, petitioners request that Mr. COVERDELL be seated conditionally. There has also been filed with the Senate a petition disputing the election of Mr. COVERDELL based on alleged funding irregularities.

In addition, the Senate has received petitions from citizens of Oregon making several claims regarding the election of Senator PACKWOOD. The Oregon petitioners ask us to require that Senator PACKWOOD stand aside and not be sworn in as a Senator while the charges are being investigated.

All petitions will be deemed officially received by the Senate today and, in accordance with standard Senate procedure, will be referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

There have been many contested Senate elections or cases in which, for a variety of reasons beyond election contests, the Senate was asked not to seat an individual. I have reviewed the history and handling of many of these cases. In that review, I have sought and received the advice of the Senate legal counsel.

Often, the Senate has sworn in the challenged Senator-elect "without prejudice." That term means without prejudice to the right of the Senate to determine the outcome of the questioned election or to judge further the qualifications of the Senator-elect. Whether or not the Senate specifically uses those words to characterize the oath administered to a Senator-elect, the characterization is necessarily implied in the case of a Member who is the subject of a challenge.

This fact is illustrated by the events that occurred on January 3, 1953. Petitions had been filed challenging the election of Senator-elect Dennis Chavez of New Mexico and the seating of incumbent Senator William Langer of North Dakota. The majority leader was Senator Robert Taft of Ohio. Prior to the swearing in of Senator-elect Chavez and Senator Langer, Senator Taft addressed the Senate and he said in part:

> My own view is that these Senators should be permitted to take the oath and be seated. It is my further view that the oath is taken without prejudice to the right of anyone contesting the seat to proceed with the contest, and without prejudice to the right of anyone protesting or asking for expulsion from the Senate to proceed. I believe that the various protests which have been filed should be referred to the appropriate committee and dealt with in due course.

Senator Taft was then asked a question about what effect the term "without prejudice" would have on any vote taken in the future about the contested election or the qualifications of the Member to serve. The majority leader responded as follows:

> My own opinion, after consultation with the Parliamentarian, is that nothing which I or any other Senator may say today in using the words "without prejudice" makes the slightest difference, unless the Senate takes some action. When a man takes the oath he becomes a Senator. I express my opinion that the taking of the oath in no way prejudices anyone who may have filed a contest. The taking of the oath in no way changes the status of the contest. That is my opinion at the present time. So far as I know, it is wholly unnecessary to make such a statement. The law is the same anyway. If a Senator takes the oath, I do not believe that that fact changes the basis of the vote, or the percentage of the vote required, which is determined by the character of the case, rather than by anything done at the time the oath is administered.

I now ask unanimous consent that the entire proceedings under the heading "Administration of Oath" for the first session of the 83d Congress, as printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on January 3, 1953, be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I agree with Majority Leader Taft's analysis. The Senate has chosen both to use the process of "swearing in without prejudice" and to ignore it; and the Senate has both unseated and retained seated-Senators under each formulation.

However, the making of this statement prior to the swearing in of the challenged Senators-elect does serve the purpose of formally acknowledging that the Senate has received and taken cognizance of the objections and is reviewing them. It will also serve to notify the Judiciary that the Senate is aware of the Federal court preceedings and has no intention of circumscribing them.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Jan. 3, 1953]

ADMINISTRATION OF OATH

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will now call, alphabetically, and in groups of four, the names of the Senators-elect who as their names are called will advance to the desk and the oath of office will be administered to them.

The legislative clerk called the names of Mr. Barrett, Mr. Beall, Mr. Bricker, and Mr. Bush.

These Senators, escorted by Mr. Hunt, Mr. Butler of Maryland, Mr. Taft, and Mr. Bridges, respectively, advanced to the desk, and the oath of office prescribed by law was administered to them by the Vice President.

The legislative clerk called the names of Mr. Butler of Nebraska, Mr. Byrd, Mr. Chavez, and Mr. Cooper.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, with reference to the seating of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Chavez], there has been filed with the Secretary of the Senate a contest, or a letter proposing a contest, which letter I have not seen. It relates to the election in New Mexico. Other protests may be filed. I understand that a protest has been filed with respect to the seating of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Langer].

My own view is that these Senators should be permitted to take the oath and be seated. It is my further view that the oath is taken without prejudice to the right of anyone contesting the seat to proceed with the contest, and without prejudice to the right of anyone protesting or asking for expulsion from the Senate to proceed. I believe that the various protests which have been filed should be referred to the appropriate committee and dealt with in due course.

Therefore, I ask that these Senators be allowed to take the oath, as I have said, without prejudice. I understand that such would be the case anyway, regardless of any statement which I might make. I should object to any effort to prevent their taking the oath today.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MORSE. Will it be understood that after they take the oath they will not be denied in any way whatsoever their prerogatives in the Senate, including the right to assignment to committees, and all other rights and prerogatives as Senators?

Mr. TAFT. That is my understanding. They will have every right to vote, and every other right as Senators unless some action is taken by the Senate itself to change their status.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No statement on the part of any Senator is necessary. If a Senator-elect takes the oath, he becomes a Senator and remains a Senator unless he is relieved of his duties by some action of the Senate.

The Chair will take advantage of the situation to state that there is a great deal of confusion with respect to the question of seating Senators against whom some objection may be registered. When there is a contest over the election of a Senator, the Senate may determine that question by majority vote. If the Senate finds that he has not been duly elected, the Senate may, by majority vote, so declare. If the Senate finds that he is not qualified as a Senator, the Senate may, by majority vote, declare the seat vacant. All the rights of the Senate are preserved.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Chair—

The VICE PRESIDENT. When an effort is made to expel a Senator who has taken the oath, because of some misconduct on his part, some malfeasance or misfeasance in office, involving his conduct as a Senator, a two-thirds vote is required to expel him. That has nothing to do with the validity of his election. It has to do with his conduct as a Senator after he is sworn in.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, with due respect to the distinguished President of the Senate, I wish to register an objection to his second statement as to the vote required to oust a Senator with respect to whom objection is made because of lack of qualifications—say with respect to character—and also as to the distinction between a majority vote and a two-thirds vote which the distinguished Presiding Officer suggests, depending upon whether the misconduct occurs before or after a person becomes a Senator. I think that question is open to debate. I do not wish to debate it at the present time. I merely wish to reserve the right to have that question raised later and determined by the Senate itself.

In the first Langer case, as I remember, it was decided by the Senate itself that a two-thirds, vote was required. The Senate decided, by a majority vote, that a two-thirds vote was required in that case, which related to action taken largely before Mr. Langer became a Senator. I think that question ought to be left open. I do not wish to argue with the Chair. I simply wish to reserve the right to present a different argument at a later time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair should state that his second statement relates to the possible disqualification of a Senator at the time of taking the oath of office.

Mr. TAFT. By reason of insufficient age, or failure to meet the residence requirement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Or for other reasons of disqualification. However, that has nothing to do with his conduct as a Senator after he takes the oath.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I should like to know the significance of the term "without prejudice." I should like to know the difference between a full oath and an oath which is taken without prejudice.

Mr. TAFT. My own opinion is that there is no difference.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. May I finish my question?

Mr. TAFT. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have been told that when the stipulation "without prejudice" is injected into the taking of the oath, at a later time, when a vote is taken upon the qualifications of the particular Senator, he may be ousted by a majority vote, whereas if that stipulation is not entered at the time he takes the oath, a two-thirds vote is required to oust him, in a case involving any question of character or other qualifications. Is that correct?

Mr. TAFT. My own opinion, after consultation with the Parliamentarian, is that nothing which I or any other Senator may say today in using the words "without prejudice" makes the slightest difference, unless the Senate takes some action. When a man takes the oath he becomes a Senator. I express my opinion that the taking of the oath in no way prejudices anyone who may have filed a contest. The taking of the oath in no way changes the status of the contest. That is my opinion at the present time. So far as I know, it is wholly unnecessary to make such a statement. The law is the same anyway. If a Senator takes the oath, I do not believe that that fact changes the basis of the vote, or the percentage of the vote required, which is determined by the character of the case, rather than by anything done at the time the oath is administered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senators who are waiting at the door please approach the desk and take the oath?

The Senators whose names had previously been called, namely, Mr. Butler of Nebraska, Mr. Byrd, Mr. Chavez, and Mr. Cooper, escorted, respectively, by Mr. Millikin, Mr. Robertson, Mr. Anderson, and Mr. Clements, advanced to the Vice President's desk, and the oath of office prescribed by law was administered to them by the Vice President.

The legislative clerk called the names of Mr. Daniel, Mr. Flanders, Mr. Goldwater, and Mr. Gore.

These Senators, escorted by Mr. Johnson of Texas, Mr. Aiken, Mr. Hayden, and Mr. Kefauver, respectively, advanced to the desk, and the oath of office prescribed by law was administered to them by the Vice President.

The legislative clerk called the names of Mr. Griswold, Mr. Holland, Mr. Ives, and Mr. Jackson.

These Senators escorted by Mr. Butler of Nebraska, Mr. Smathers, Mr. Lehman, and Mr. Magnuson respectively, advanced to the desk, and the oath of office prescribed by law was administered to them by the Vice President.

The legislative clerk called the names of Mr. Jenner, Mr. Kennedy, Mr. Kilgore, and Mr. Knowland.

These Senators escorted by Mr. Capehart, Mr. Saltonstall, Mr. Neely, and Mr. Hickenlooper respectively, advanced to the desk, and the oath of office prescribed by law was administered to them by the Vice President.

The legislative clerk called the names of Mr. Kuchel, Mr. Langer, Mr. Malone, and Mr. Mansfield.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that a protest has been filed against the seating of the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. Langer). Everything that was said with reference to the Chavez case applies also to the Langer case.

The Senators whose names had previously been called, namely Mr. Kuchel, Mr. Langer, Mr. Malone, and Mr. Mansfield escorted by Mr. Knowland, Mr. Young, Mr. McCarran, and Mr. Murray, respectively, advanced to the desk and the oath of office prescribed by law was administered to them by the Vice President.

The legislative clerk called the names of Mr. Martin, Mr. McCarthy, Mr. Pastore, and Mr. Payne.

These Senators, escorted by Mr. Duff, Mr. Wiley, Mr. Glenn, and Mrs. Smith of Maine, respectively, advanced to the desk and the oath of office prescribed by law was administered to them by the Vice President.

The legislative clerk called the names of Mr. Potter, Mr. Purtell, Mr. Smith of New Jersey, and Mr. Stennis.

The Senators escorted by Mr. Ferguson, Mr. Bush, Mr. Hendickson, and Mr. Eastland, respectively, advanced to the desk and the oath of office prescribed by law was administered to them by the Vice President.

The legislative clerk called the names of Mr. Symington, Mr. Thye, Mr. Watkins, and Mr. Williams.

These Senators, escorted by Mr. Hennings, Mr. Humphrey, Mr. Bennett, and Mr. Frear, respectively, advanced to the desk, and the oath of office prescribed by law was administered to them by the Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, under the rules of the Senate, Senator DOLE, having just been reelected, would not be permitted to speak until after being sworn in. However, I believe it fair and appropriate for the minority leader to have the opportunity to make a statement with respect to the subject matter which I have just stated, and I therefore ask unanimous consent of the Senate that Senator DOLE be permitted to make a statement at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Senator DOLE.

CHAPLAIN HALVERSON

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, first I wish to join the distinguished majority leader in expressing our hopes and prayers for the full and complete recovery of the Senate Chaplain, Dr. Halverson.

CONTESTING ELECTION IN GEORGIA AND OREGON

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I want to echo the majority leader's statement quoting a former majority leader of this body, Robert Taft of Ohio.

I would reiterate and underscore the view of Senator Taft that, "these Senators should be permitted to take the oath and be seated. It is my further view that the oath is taken without prejudice to the right of anyone contesting the seat to proceed with the contest, and without prejudice to the right of anyone protesting or asking for expulsion from the Senate to proceed. I believe that the various protests which have been filed should be referred to the appropriate committee and dealt with in due course * * *."

Senator Taft went on to state that, "nothing which I or any other Senator may say today in using the words 'without prejudice' makes the slightest difference, unless that Senate takes some action. When a man [or women] takes the oath he [or she] becomes a Senator. I express my opinion that the taking of the oath in no way prejudices anyone who may have filed a contest. The taking of the oath in no way changes the status of the contest."

It is this Senator's view, the Senator from Kansas, that the phrase "without prejudice" used today is of course meaningless, in its effect upon any subsequent Senate action.

All Senators sworn in today are Senators in every sense of the word. In effect we are all sworn in "without prejudice."

AUTHORIZATION FOR SECRETARY TO MAKE TECHNICAL AND CLERICAL CORRECTIONS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, for the duration of the 103d Congress, the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to make technical and clerical corrections in the engrossments of all Senate-passed bills and resolutions, Senate amendments to House bills and resolutions, Senate amendments to House amendments to Senate bills and resolutions, and Senate amendments to House amendments to Senate amendments to House bills or resolutions.

AUTHORIZATION FOR SECRETARY TO RECEIVE MESSAGES

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that for the duration of the 103d Congress, when the Senate is in recess or adjournment, the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to receive messages from the President of the United States, and—with the exception of House bills, joint resolutions, and concurrent resolutions—messages from the House of Representatives; and that they be appropriately referred; and that the President of the Senate, the President pro tempore, and the Acting President pro tempore be authorized to sign duly enrolled bills and joint resolutions.

AUTHORIZATION FOR FLOOR PRIVILEGES

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that for the duration of the 103d Congress, Senators be allowed to leave at the desk with the Journal clerk the names of two staff members who will be granted the privilege of the floor during the consideration of the specific matter noted, and that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to rotate such staff members as space allows.

TREATIES AND NOMINATIONS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that for the duration of the 103d Congress, it be in order to refer treaties and nominations on the day when they are received from the President, even when the Senate has no executive session that day.

BILLS, JOINT RESOLUTIONS, CONCURRENT RESOLUTIONS, AND SIMPLE RESOLUTIONS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that no bills or further resolutions, or committee-reported legislation, other than those whose introduction and consideration have been agreed to by the majority leader, following consultation with the Republican leader, be in order prior to January 21, and I further ask unanimous consent that, beginning January 21 and for the remainder of the 103d Congress, Senators may be allowed to bring to the desk, bills, joint resolutions, concurrent resolutions, and simple resolutions, for referral to appropriate committees.

COMPENSATION FOR SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on behalf of Senators GLENN, ROTH, PRYOR, STEVENS, and GRASSLEY, I send to the desk a joint resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the joint resolution.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S.J. Res. 1) to ensure that the compensation and other emoluments attached to the office of Secretary of the Treasury are those which were in effect on January 1, 1989.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I am introducing a joint resolution which reduces the compensation and other emoluments attached to the office of Secretary of the Treasury to those which were in effect on January 1, 1989. This has been necessitated by President-elect Clinton's announced intention to appoint our distinguished colleague from Texas, LLOYD BENTSEN, to be Secretary of the Treasury. There is no question that the compensation of the Secretary of the Treasury was increased by Congress during Senator BENTSEN's current term in office—which runs from noon on January 3, 1989, until noon on January 3, 1995. Therefore, Senator BENTSEN is currently ineligible for appointment under the terms of article I, section 6, clause 2 of the Constitution, which reads:

> No Senator or Representative shall, during the Time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil Office under the Authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the Emoluments whereof shall have been encreased during such time; and no Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office.

I am introducing the joint resolution on behalf of myself and Senators ROTH, PRYOR, STEVENS, and GRASSLEY. The resolution provides that the reduced rate of pay for the Office of the Treasury Secretary shall take effect on noon of January 20, 1993.

The effect of this joint resolution is to lift the disqualification on Senator BENTSEN imposed by article I, section 6, clause 2 of the Constitution in a manner which conforms to the purpose and spirit of this provision and is consistent with precedents of the Congress.

In practical terms, the rate of pay is reduced for this Office from $148,400—the salary as of January 1, 1993—to $99,500—the salary as of January 1, 1989. The salary is frozen at this $99,500 level, and the Treasury Secretary is not entitled to any cost-of-living increase or any other increase in compensation or emoluments after January 1, 1989, under—

First, the Ethics Reform Act of 1989, Public Law 101-194, or any other provision of law amended by that act, or

Second, any other provision of law, or provision which has force and effect of law, that is enacted or becomes effective during the period beginning at noon of January 3, 1989, and ending at noon of January 3, 1995.

This joint resolution is modeled after the precedent set in the case of Senator William Saxbe, who was nominated to be Attorney General of the United States by President Nixon in 1973. The sponsors of this joint resolution have carefully reviewed the legislative record made in support of the Saxbe pay legislation, which included hearings before the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee and Senate Judiciary Committee, and lengthy floor statements. We are satisfied that the approach which allowed Senator Saxbe to be nominated and appointed to the Attorney General position will also work in the case of Senator BENTSEN and the Secretary of Treasury position.

I note that the joint resolution does not provide for an automatic increase in the Treasury Secretary's salary at the end of Senator BENTSEN'S term—noon on January 3, 1995—or when another Treasury Secretary assumes the job after LLOYD BENTSEN leaves it. These reverter provisions were included in other cases, notably when Senator Edmund Muskie was nominated and appointed to the Secretary of State position by President Carter in 1980. However, in order to remove any question that the Secretary of Treasury position will have an increase in compensation based on any provision of law enacted or effective during the term for which Senator BENTSEN was elected, we have rejected the Muskie approach and followed the Saxbe precedent.

Although legislation similar to this joint resolution has been passed before, its provisions have never been interpreted in light of article I, section 6, clause 2 of the Constitution. In view of this, the joint resolution provides that any person aggrieved by an action of the Secretary of the Treasury may bring a civil action in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia to contest the constitutionality of the appointment and continuance in office of the Secretary of the Treasury on the ground that it violates article I, section 6, clause 2 of the Constitution. Similar judicial review provisions were included in the Saxbe and Muskie precedents.

Such an action may only be brought in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, which shall have exclusive jurisdiction without regard to the sum or value of the matter in controversy. Any claim in such an action that the appointment of the Treasury Secretary violates article I, section 6, clause 2 of the Constitution shall be heard and determined by a panel of three judges. This joint resolution provides the legislative basis for authorizing as three-judge court under section 2284 of title 28, United States Code. The joint resolution provides jurisdiction in the three-judge court over only the claims challenging the constitutionality of the appointment, and not over any other claims which may be involved in the action.

The District Court for the District of Columbia shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of any claim challenging the constitutionality of the appointment under article I, section 6, clause 2.

An appeal may be taken directly to the Supreme Court from any interlocutory or final judgment, decree, or order on the constitutionality of the appointment under article I, section 6, clause 2. The Supreme Court must accept jurisdiction over the appeal, advance the appeal on the docket, and expedite the appeal, only if it has not previously ruled on this constitutional issue.

The President-elect has announced his desire to appoint our friend and colleague, Senator BENTSEN, to be Secretary of the Treasury. We should act quickly to resolve his eligibility to serve in that position. Therefore, I urge the Senate to act immediately to consider this joint resolution and approve it.

(At the request of Mr. GLENN, the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD at this point:)

S.J. RES. 1

• Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I am pleased to join the distinguished chairman in introducing this joint resolution and in urging its prompt consideration. In view of article I, section 6, clause 2 of the Constitution, this legislation must be enacted before our distinguished colleague, Senator BENTSEN, is appointed to head the Treasury Department.

We have faced similar situations before and have taken various approaches in resolving them. I am pleased that, at this time, the cosponsors of the joint resolution have followed the Saxbe precedent, which in my opinion eliminates all legal questions regarding President-elect Clinton's announced intention to nominate our colleague. I concur in Senator GLENN's learned explanation of this legislation. I join with him in urging its prompt consideration.

Thank you, Mr. President.•

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 1) was deemed read a third time and passed, as follows:

S.J. RES. 1

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) the compensation and other emoluments attached to the office of Secretary of the Treasury shall be those in effect January 1, 1989, notwithstanding any increase in such compensation or emoluments after that date under—

(1) the Ethics Reform Act of 1989 (Public Law 101-194) or any other provision of law amended by that Act; or

(2) any other provision of law, or provision which has the force and effect of law, that is enacted or becomes effective during the period beginning at noon of January 3, 1989, and ending at noon of January 3, 1995.

(b)(1) Any person aggrieved by an action of the Secretary of the Treasury may bring a civil action in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia to contest the constitutionality of the appointment and continuance in office of the Secretary of the Treasury on the ground that such appointment and continuance in office is in violation of article I, section 6, clause 2, of the Constitution. The United States District Court for the District of Columbia shall have exclusive jurisdiction over such a civil action, without regard to the sum or value of the matter in controversy.

(2) Any claim challenging the constitutionality of the appointment and continuance in office of the Secretary of the Treasury on the ground that such appointment and continuance in office is in violation of article I, section 6, clause 2, of the Constitution, in an action brought under paragraph (1) shall be heard and determined by a panel of three judges in accordance with section 2284 of title 28, United States Code. It shall be the duty of the district court to advance on the docket and to expedite the disposition of any matter brought under this subsection.

(3)(A) An appeal may be taken directly to the Supreme Court of the United States from any interlocutory or final judgment, decree, or order upon the validity of the appointment and continuance in office of the Secretary of the Treasury under article I, section 6, clause 2, of the Constitution, entered in any action brought under this subsection. Any such appeal shall be taken by a notice of appeal filed within 20 days after such judgment, decree, or order is entered.

(B) The Supreme Court shall, if it has not previously ruled on the question presented by an appeal taken pursuant to subparagraph (A), accept jurisdiction over the appeal, advance the appeal on the docket, and expedite the appeal.

(c) This joint resolution shall become effective at 12:00 p.m., January 20, 1993.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AUTHORIZING THE U.S. SECRET SERVICE TO CONTINUE TO FURNISH PROTECTION TO THE FORMER VICE PRESIDENT AND HIS SPOUSE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send a joint resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S.J. Res. 2) to authorize the United States Secret Service to continue to furnish protection to the former Vice President or his spouse.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, this joint resolution is similar to those approved by the Congress in the past. While former Presidents are afforded protection by the Secret Service, former Vice Presidents are not. Therefore, as of January 20, Vice President Quayle would not be covered, although significant and credible threats remain against him due solely to his duties as the Vice President.

The joint resolution provides the identical length of protection afforded to former Vice President Mondale, and is supported by the U.S. Secret Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S.J. RES. 2

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That—

(1) the United States Secret Service, in addition to other duties now provided by law, is authorized to furnish protection to—

(A) the person occupying the Office of Vice President of the United States immediately preceding January 20, 1993, or

(B) his spouse,

if the President determines that such person may thereafter be in significant danger; and

(2) protection of any such person, pursuant to the authority provided in paragraph (1), shall continue only for such period as the President determines, except that such protection shall not continue beyond July 20, 1993, unless otherwise permitted by law.

REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON POW-MIA AFFAIRS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, pursuant to the provisions of Senate Resolution 82, the Select Committee on POW-MIA Affairs concluded at the end of the 102d Congress.

I ask unanimous consent that a report that was prepared by the select committee may be filed with the Senate prior to January 13, 1993, and that expenses incurred in the printing and distribution of the report be paid for from funds that were previously authorized for that select committee in the last Congress or from the contingent fund of the Senate with the approval of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENDING THE LIFE OF THE JOINT CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE ON INAUGURAL CEREMONIES

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator FORD, I send a concurrent resolution to the desk to provide for the continuation of the Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies and to authorize the use of the rotunda of the Capitol in connection with the inaugural proceedings and ceremonies. This resolution also includes express authority for the joint committee to accept gifts and donations of goods and services which former committees have customarily accepted in connection with past inaugural ceremonies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 2) to extend the life of the Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies and the provisions of S. Con. Res. 103.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

S. CON. RES. 2

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That effective January 5, 1993, the joint committee created by S. Con. Res. 103 of the One Hundred Second Congress, to authorize the rotunda of the United States Capitol to be used in connection with the proceedings and ceremonies for the inauguration of the President-elect and the Vice President-elect of the United States, are hereby continued with the same power and authority.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

PROVIDING FOR A RECESS OR ADJOURNMENT OF THE SENATE AND THE HOUSE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I send to the desk a concurrent resolution and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the concurrent resolution.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 3) providing for a recess or adjournment of the Senate from January 6 or 7, 1993 to January 20, 1993, and an adjournment of the House from January 6, 1993 to January 20, 1993.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

S. CON. RES. 3

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That when the Senate recesses or adjourns on Wednesday, January 6, or Thursday, January 7, 1993, pursuant to a motion made by the majority leader or his designee, in accordance with the provisions of this resolution, it stand recessed or adjourned until 3 o'clock p.m. on Wednesday, January 20, 1993, and that when the House of Representatives adjourns on Wednesday, January 6, 1993, pursuant to a motion made by the majority leader or his designee, in accordance with the provisions of this resolution, it stand adjourned until 10 o'clock a.m. on Wednesday, January 20, 1993, or until 12 o'clock noon on the second day after Members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of this concurrent resolution.

SEC. 2. The majority leader of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, acting jointly after consultation with the minority leader of the Senate and the minority leader of the House, shall notify the Members of the Senate and the House, respectively, to reassemble whenever, in their opinion, the public interest shall warrant it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ORDERS FOR TOMORROW

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 12:40 p.m. on Wednesday, January 6; that upon reconvening at 12:40 p.m., Wednesday, the Journal of the proceedings be deemed approved to date; that the time for the two leaders be reserved; and that at 12:45 p.m. the Senate proceed as a body to the House of Representatives for a joint meeting for the purpose of counting the electoral ballots.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it so so ordered.

Mr. BRADLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY].

TAJIKISTAN: ETHNIC CLEANSING AND GENOCIDE IN CENTRAL ASIA

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I rise today to call attention to the increasingly tragic situation in Tajikistan in the former Soviet Union. Tajikistan represents a case of ethnic and regional conflict and a potential case of genocide. Although we must recognize that we cannot resolve every act of injustice in this world, at the same time as the one remaining superpower, we have moral obligation to stand and be counted. We must also recognize that our words have consequences.

The case I would like to discuss today is our serious misjudgment of Central Asia. One of our greatest fears is that ethnic, regional, and religious strife will engulf the Eurasian subcontinent, dragging in not only the nation of the former Soviet Union, but those on the periphery, including Turkey, Iran, Pakistan, and Afghanistan. Already a series of these interethnic conflicts in Nagorno-Karabakh, Abkhazia, and Ossetia has threatened to ignite the entire region of the Caucasus. Events in Tajikistan similarly threaten to ignite all of Central and Southern Asia.

In Tajikistan, in the southeastern corner of the former Soviet Union, upwards of 100,000 people have been killed and several hundred thousand have been left homeless refugees in their own country. There are elements of both regional conflict and ethnic cleansing. People who are easily identified as coming from the Pamirs have been seized and summarily executed. The examples are endless—the journalist, Khusbakht Muborakkadamov, was picked up on the street, and Shogun Davlatimirov, head of a consumer union, was taken off a plane and shot. The images of this carnage have not been on our television screens as have the tragedies of Somalia and Bosnia, but the death, devastation, and cruelty are equally present.

As the Soviet Union fell apart, we had an interest in encouraging the independence of the many constituent parts of that former empire. We rushed to recognize the existing regimes and to grant legitimacy to them. Secretary of State Baker flew to all the emerging republics. He landed in Dushanbe, met with then President Nabiyev, and declared that Tajikistan would adhere to American conditions for recognition, including respect for the Helsinki accords as well as other human rights agreements. Refusing to meet with any opposition leaders no matter how moderate, the Secretary sped on to other capitals after declaring that Tajikistan was well on its way to becoming a democracy.

The problem was that Tajikistan had just concluded a Presidential campaign, in which the progressive forces had succeeded in forming an alliance with the moderate Islamic forces. The courageous leader of the moderates, Davlat Khudonzarov, himself a distinguished filmmaker and outspoken democrat, had predicated his campaign on the proposition that America would not recognize or assist a dictatorial regime which refused to adhere to basic human rights. The Secretary's rush to recognize Nabiyev cut the heart out of the progressives' arguments. Khudonazarov had lost the election only through the astounding corruption of the old regime. Convinced that no one in the West would aid in an appeal of the election results, the opposition accepted the election and sought compromise with the old regime, but little avail.

Tajikistan's very existence is now threatened by the civil war which has flared through most of 1992 and shows little sign of abating. The civil was has been based in the opposition of a coalition of progressive, nationalist, and Islamic forces to the Communist regime which continued to rule well after the August 1991 coup. The Communist dominated Parliament in November 1991 elected Rakhmon Nabiyev as President. He became the focus of the opposition, for he was the same pre-1985 party leader ousted by Gorbachev for his corruption and opposition to change.

After a spring of demonstrations and counterdemonstrations, violence erupted between the supporters of the old regime largely from the region of Kulyab against the opposition stronghold in Kurgan-Tyube. The subsequent battles left the economy in shambles, well over 50,000 dead, and perhaps as many as a half million refugees. By September, Nabiyev was forced to resign, but the subsequent government formed by Acting President Imomali Rakhmanov, an associate of Nabiyev, was composed exclusively of supporters of the old regime. They occupied Dushanbe, ordered the opposition to put down its arms, and continued the carnage. In the southern part of the country, thousands of refugees sought to flee the country. Hundreds have been reported drowned in the icy waters of the Amu-Darya as desperate people sought to reach Afghanistan. In the meantime, Davlat Khudonazarov and his progressive colleagues were given the nearly hopeless task of mediating the situation. Despite their efforts, the violence continued to escalate.

The Russian 201st Motorized Rifle Division has maintained a certain neutrality. The commander of the division is a Tajik. While the Russian Foreign Ministry is obviously concerned about the developments they are equally ambivalent about taking any direct action. Russian Foreign Ministry officials voice serious concerns about the lack of stability serving as an attraction for intervention by Iran or Afghanistan, as well as the dangers of increased drug, arms, and other illicit trade.

While Islamic fundamentalism has had little influence there, as the conflict continues, the influence grows. I have received direct appeals from those who claim that genocide is being perpetrated against the peoples of the Pamir who have sought to mediate existing ethnic and regional conflicts. Davlat Khudonazarov and his family have received numerous death threats. His vice presidential running mate, Aspiddin Sakhibnazarov, in fact was killed, as was the head of Tajik television. Reports of people being dragged from their apartments, pulled off buses and planes, or simply seized on the streets and shot have been verified by a number of sources. To repeat, perhaps 100,000 people have been killed and over half a million have been forced to flee their homes. All this in a country of just a little more than 5 million people.

While the adjoining countries, particularly Uzbekistan and Kyrgyzstan, agreed to take some action in early December, nothing has yet happened, and indeed some Uzbek troops have been dispatched. Nonetheless, as the New Year begins, there is little sign of the repression by the government abating.

Having sent what, I believe, was the wrong message with Secretary Baker's original visit, we began our relationship with independent Tajikistan on the wrong foot. After establishing our Embassy, we pulled out all of our people as the violence grew, leaving us with little direct contact with the current regime. I do not at all argue with the decision to withdraw our people in order to protect them. We did present a demarche to the Tajik authorities on December 19 expressing our concern, but we did so in such a quiet manner that even those who carefully follow Tajik affairs were unaware of that step.

I believe that the conflict in Tajikistan has the potential to engulf the entire area in violence, but even if this were not the case, we have a moral obligation to do what we can to protect the human rights of those who are threatened with repression and death.

At a minimum, we ought to express our concerns in the most public fashion possible. We ought also to dispatch a special representative to Tajikistan to present our concerns directly to the powers that be and to utilize whatever leverage we might possess—through political influence, potential aid, et cetera—to try to bring an end to the carnage. We also ought to explore through all available international organizations some joint efforts as well as to determine what, if any, regional solutions can be found. Moreover, our silence now belies all of our past expressions of concern for the future of other former republics, and for the plight of people worldwide who are the victims of brutal, violent repression.

Television has brought the horrors of Somalia and Bosnia into the homes of Americans on a daily basis. The faces of the victims have compelled us to action. The fact that the American media has not reported from Tajikistan does not mean that the plight of these people is any less horrifying or any less deserving of our attention.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Republican leader, Senator DOLE.

JOHN DIAMANTAKIOU

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, those of us who are privileged to serve in the Senate know just how much we rely on our staffs.

In fact, I suspect that most offices are like mine—where past and present staff members become part of an extended family.

Today, I have the very sad duty of informing my colleagues about a tragic death in my family.

On December 22, John Diamantakiou, an outstanding young man who worked for me in the Republican leadership office, passed away after being stricken with a congenital heart affliction.

A native of Lynn, MA, John received a bachelor's and master's degree from Emerson College in Boston.

As part of his graduate work, John worked in my office as an intern, where he impressed everyone with his intelligence, sense of humor, and work ethic.

When his internship was completed, John joined my office on a permanent basis.

And over the past several years, he has become a very important part of the Republican leadership office.

Everyone who was fortunate enough to come into contact with John can testify to the joy that John bought to his work and to our lives.

John never did anything halfway. For him, everything became a passion. And one of those passions was politics—how John loved to talk about politics and campaigns.

I especially remember this summer, when he accompanied me to the Republican Convention in Houston, and this fall, when he joined me on a campaign swing throughout the Northeast.

If I ever needed to find John, I always knew he would be where the action was.

Another passion of John's was sports. He helped to guide my office softball team, and he was always ready to update me on the trials and tribulations of his beloved Boston Bruins.

A third passion of John's was his Greek heritage. We all looked forward to John's trips to Massachusetts, because we knew he would return to the office with boxes of Greek pastries baked by his mother and father.

John took pride in the fact that it was in Greece, many centuries ago, where the ideas of democracy and public service first came to being—in fact, John kept a volume of Plato's philosophy on his desk.

I can't help but note today that throughout her history, America has succeeded only because people like John Diamantakiou gave themselves to serving their country.

I spoke to John's family when I attended his funeral service, and my thoughts and prayers remain with his parents, Lambros and Tina; and his sister Effie; his brother, Peter; his grandmother, Effie; and his fiancee, Sarah.

A political communication scholarship fund at Emerson College has been established in John's memory, and those interested in contributing can contact my office for further information.

In closing, let me share the words of Oliver Wendell Holmes of John's native Massachusetts. In describing the events that shaped his generation, Holmes said, "In our youth, we had the great good fortune to have our hearts touched by fire."

Tragically, John's heart gave out in his youth—but we can take solace in the fact that throughout his life, John's heart was, indeed, touched by fire.

And I also know that John's memory will always remain in my heart, and in the hearts of the countless people he touched through his friendship and kindness.

Mr. MITCHELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the majority leader, Senator Mitchell.

JOHN DIAMANTAKIOU

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the death of any individual is a tragedy, for we are diminished by the loss of any fellow human. But the death of a young, so lively person is a special loss, because it seems so meaningless, so unfair.

My friend and colleague, the Republican leader, suffered such a loss just before Christmas last year, when his young assistant and friend, John Diamantakiou died of a heart ailment at the age of 26.

I offer my sympathy to Senator DOLE and to all the members of the Republican leadership staff who worked with John. Senator DOLE has paid tribute to John's outstanding qualities of intelligence, humor, and energy. I share that assessment. John's career with Senator DOLE testifies to the future that his talents would have earned him. His would have been an outstanding career.

I express my sympathy also to John's family. I hope it is some consolation to them that their son was so highly regarded by all those who worked with him here in the Senate, Republicans and Democrats alike.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the majority leader.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The following petitions and memorials were laid before the Senate and were referred or ordered to lie on the table as indicated:

POM–1. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

ASSEMBLY JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 84

"Whereas, all children, but particularly children from low-income households, are in need of year-round nutrition and adequate meals to maintain their physical and mental health and well-being; and

"Whereas, the Summer Food Service Program for Children is designed to continue the provision of nutritious meals for children during times when school food programs are not available due to vacation periods; and

"Whereas, the Summer Food Service Program for Children is serving less than 10 percent of the needy children in California who get a nutritious meal daily during the school year from the National School Lunch Program; and

"Whereas, the reason many potential sponsors of the Summer Food Service Program for Children give for their nonparticipation in the program is the excessive amount of federal paperwork required; and

"Whereas, the burden of paperwork required for the Summer Food Service Program for Children and other child nutrition programs can be addressed through the Child Nutrition Act reauthorization anticipated to occur in federal fiscal year 1994; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to provide, under the Child Nutrition Act, the necessary statutory authority for the United States Department of Agriculture to issue more flexible and less cumbersome regulations, including provisions for expanding the eligibility of areas in which poor economic conditions exist, for the Summer Food Service Program for Children; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Congress urge the United States Department of Agriculture to encourage more schools, governmental units, and public and private nonprofit organizations to sponsor the Summer Food Service Program for Children in their communities to ensure that more needy children receive access to nutritious meals during times of school vacation periods; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Chief Clerk of the Assembly transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Secretary of Agriculture, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

POM–2. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry:

POM-3. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation:

"ASSEMBLY JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 97

"Whereas, under the Passenger Services Act of 1886 (46 U.S.C. 289), foreign-flagged passenger ships are prohibited from transporting passengers between ports in the United States; and

"Whereas, there are presently very few American-flagged cruise ships and none providing scheduled "cruise ship" port calls along the California coast; and

"Whereas, because large cruise ships are almost entirely foreign-flagged, the Passenger Services Act of 1886 effectively eliminates California as a destination for those large cruise ships, despite the market demand to visit this state and the large number of California ports capable of handling cruise ships; and

"Whereas, the few cruise ships with home ports in California presently have an estimated local economic impact of $20 million per year in docking and wharfage fees, supplies, and labor workforces, with additional contributions from ship's crew, passenger cruise fares, and precruise and postcruise hotel stays for passengers; and

"Whereas, the United States policy embodied in the Passenger Services Act of 1886 has, in effect, stimulated the cruise ship industry development in neighboring countries, including Canada, Mexico, and the islands of the Caribbean Sea, at the expense of United States ports; for example, foreign-flagged cruise ships destined for the Hawaiian Islands or Alaska must embark from Port Ensenada in Mexico or Vancouver, British Columbia in Canada; and

"Whereas, the industry trend towards shorter, lower cost cruises has hurt the ports in San Francisco, Oakland, and Monterey, because they are midway between the major cruise markets of Mexico and Alaska; and

"Whereas, California ports and coastal communities would quickly benefit from increased tourism if the ban is lifted, creating a new industry of cruise ships calling on California's coastal cities, including San Diego, Long Beach/Los Angeles, Santa Barbara, Monterey, San Francisco/Oakland, and Eureka, that would have a positive effect on California's economy from tourism, development of services, and the creation of new jobs; and

"Whereas, the cruise ship industry has grown over 600 percent in the last 10 years, with Florida and Vancouver, Canada receiving a substantial share of this market, due, in part, from the ban in the Passenger Services Act of 1886; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the President and Congress of the United States are respectfully memorialized to review the effects of the Passenger Services Act of 1886 and consider permitting foreign-flagged passenger vessels to carry passengers between United States ports, until such time as there is competition with American-flagged passenger vessels in the same market and after a reasonable transition period following the commencement of that competition has elapsed; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Chief Clerk of the Assembly transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States, and to the United States Secretary of Transportation."

POM-4. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation:

ASSEMBLY JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 94

"Whereas, President John F. Kennedy said, in his address to the University of California at Berkeley on March 23, 1962, "Space * * * would emphasize the interests that must unite us * * * Knowledge * * * is the pass key to the future * * *"; and

"Whereas, the California Legislature applauds the goals of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration Space Station Freedom Program, and the application of its resources and capabilities for the benefit of all human beings, in this decade of advancement of scientific knowledge; and

"Whereas, as the Cold War ends, and a New World Order begins, Californians are committed to remaining the world leader in aerospace technology and scientific research, in the interest of the economic well-being of both the state and the nation; and

"Whereas, the Space Station Freedom Program helps achieve economic well-being by employing thousands of Californians whose critical skills are necessary to enable the United States to compete effectively in the global economy of this decade and beyond; and

"Whereas, high technology jobs are an essential component in maintaining the prominence of California and the United States in state-of-the-art technologies; technologies which historically have benefited this country domestically and have contributed substantially to our balance of trade with foreign nations; and

"Whereas, this program, a civilian project, not only performs its role as an orbiting platform for fundamental life sciences and microgravity research, but it also inspires our youth toward higher education, and promotes international cooperation and understanding; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Members of the Legislature of this state hereby proclaim our support for the continued development of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration Space Station Freedom Program, as a cornerstone of investment in the future of our state and nation; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Chief Clerk of the Assembly transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States, and to the Administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration."

POM-5. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation:

"ASSEMBLY JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 90

"Whereas, the top priority of the Legislature is to maintain the highest level of aviation safety and security possible in California; and

"Whereas, commercial aviation and general aviation are critical to the economic health of California and of the United States in an era of increasing economic internationalization; and

"Whereas, it is essential to integrate airports with surface rail and highway transportation systems in order to build a functioning multimodal transportation system; and

"Whereas, over 33 commercial airports nationwide, including several in California, will experience significant congestion by the year 2000; and

"Whereas, the growing demand for air service and access to airports requires the most efficient use of all available federal, state, and local aviation funds in order to provide the needed facilities and support services; and

"Whereas, all aviation system improvements must be implemented in a way that protects the environment, protects the quality of life, and assures compatible land uses around airports; and

"Whereas, these goals can be accomplished only through a full partnership among the federal government, states, local governments, airport operators, airlines, and air cargo service providers, and aircraft owners and pilots; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to consider the following transportation policies in developing new multiyear aviation program reauthorization legislation:

"(a) Allow flexibility in the use of Airport Improvement Program (AIP) and Passenger Facility Charge (PFC) funds for "off-airport" intermodal ground access projects if: (1) the facility will be used for travel to and from the airport; and (2) private sector or local or state funds are also committed to the project.

"(b) Distribute all AIP grant funds for nonprimary airports to states on a "block grant" basis. Congress and the Federal Aviation Administration should establish national priorities to be used by the states in allocating AIP funds to nonprimary airports, and state block grant programs and procedures should be developed in consultation with local and regional transportation agencies.

"(c) Increase funding for the AIP to $2.5 billion for 1993, with an increase in following years that is linked to the Consumer Price Index (CPI). Entitlement formulas from the Airport and Airway Safety and Capacity Expansion Act of 1987 (P.L. 100-223), based on enplaned passengers, should also be adjusted for changes in the CPI.

"(d) Increase the percentage of AIP funds for airport and aviation system planning grants from one-half of 1 percent to 2 percent, distributed according to a population-based allocation formula for states and metropolitan planning organizations (MPOs).

"(e) Require the Federal Aviation Administration to develop a prioritized multiyear National Airport Development Program for funding airport projects as an element of the National Plan of Integrated Airport Systems (NPIAS). Priorities should be defined in conjunction with the states, local agencies owning airports, and MPOs, and the program should incorporate the regional and state aviation capital improvement programs.

"(f) Require the Federal Aviation Administration to establish criteria to determine which airports in the NPIAS are of national significance and to promulgate guidelines requiring each state to develop a Statewide Plan of Integrated Airport Systems (SPIAS), and require each metropolitan area with a major commercial hub airport to develop a Metropolitan Integrated Airport System (MIAS). Provide that these system planning activities receive a high priority for AIP funding.

"(g) Encourage states, MPOs, and local governments to develop land use plans for areas around airports to ensure compatible land uses and to protect against encroachment by residential development and other incompatible land uses. Require the Federal Aviation Administration to develop mechanisms or incentives to assist states, MPOs, and local governments in developing and implementing airport land use compatibility plans including a land-banking program.

"(h) Develop a program to mitigate or correct incompatible land uses that have already occurred near airports.

"(i) Extend and expand the Military Airport Program which allows current and former military airports to be used to enhance the civilian aviation system capacity. Additional military airports should become eligible, and funding for the program should be increased. Designation of the additional military facilities for joint use or future reuse should be based in part on areas of unmet demand in the civil air transportation system.

"(j) Require the Department of Defense and the Federal Aviation Administration to jointly evaluate the present and future need for restricted military airspace, and make any unneeded military airspace available for civil aviation use.

"(k) In order to encourage the development of partnerships between public entities and the private sector to improve transportation services and to maximize the financial benefits that can be derived by local public agencies from the use of commercial air facilities, require the Federal Aviation Administration to waive any grant agreement requirements that restrict the use of revenues generated by airports; and be it further

Resolved, That the Chief Clerk of the Assembly transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States, to the chairperson of every congressional committee having jurisdiction over transportation and interstate commerce, and to the Director of Transportation and the Chairperson of the California Transportation Commission."

POM-6. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources:

"ASSEMBLY JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 67

"Whereas, the United States Congress is currently considering legislation which would establish a comprehensive national energy strategy; and

"Whereas, California and federal energy strategies already recognize and should continue to recognize the legitimate and important role that diverse fuels and energy alternatives will play in meeting California's and the nation's energy and environmental needs; and

"Whereas, fossil fuel combustion has been and is projected by the United States Department of Energy and the State Energy Resources Conservation and Development Commission to continue to be a significant energy source for our economy during the next 20 years; and

"Whereas, the California Legislature, the State Energy Resources Conservation and Development Commission, the Public Utilities Commission, and other agencies are considering energy strategies which complement federal policy; and

"Whereas, efficient use of natural gas, as one strategy, particularly for new end-uses resulting from technological advances, will help improve air quality in California and the rest of the nation; and

"Whereas, the nation will significantly benefit from increased research, development, and demonstration (RD&D) funding for natural gas end-use technologies for all of the following reasons:

"(a) To achieve federal Clean Air Act standards and further reduce the environmental impacts of using this cleaner domestic fossil fuel.

"(b) To improve the security of our energy supply and reduce our trade deficit by displacing imported oil from other nations with the efficient use of domestically produced natural gas.

"(c) To facilitate economic growth by enabling domestic industry to compete in the global market place more effectively by using lower priced energy sources; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature urges the President and the Congress of the United States to include, in the legislation to establish a national energy strategy, provisions for accelerated research, development, and demonstration on all of the following:

"(a) Improved, highly efficient natural gas combustion processes, low NO_x burners, engines, and other solutions for stationary sources such as industrial sites and commercial and residential space conditioners and water heaters.

"(b) Dedicated natural gas vehicles that could contribute to the substantial reduction in mobile source emissions that will be required to comply with California fleet vehicle regulations and meet future federal Clean Air Act standards.

"(c) Second and third generation fuel cells which can use electrochemical energy conversion to potentially produce electricity with less than 1 percent of the atmospheric contamination of conventional fossil fuel-based electric generation; and be it further

"Resolved, That, in order to make these least cost energy options available for industrial, commercial, and residential natural gas consumers through an accelerated RD&D program, the Legislature urges the President and the Congress of the United States to fund this program for $2.5 billion over 10 years, beginning with $189 million in federal fiscal year 1993; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Legislature urges the President and the Congress to include in the national energy strategy legislation and subsequent appropriations, a commitment to increased RD&D funding to improve natural gas technologies which produce very few emissions; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Chief Clerk of the Assembly transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

POM-7. A resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of New Jersey; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works:

"ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION NO. 78

"Whereas, the National Estuary Program was initiated by the United States Environmental Protection Agency in 1985, and was formalized and expanded as part of the "Water Quality Act of 1987" in efforts to formulate comprehensive plans to restore certain significant estuaries in this country; and

"Whereas, the federal legislation specifically identifies the New York-New Jersey harbor estuary as one to which priority consideration should be given; and

"Whereas, the New York-New Jersey harbor estuary is a dynamic ecosystem and a resource of great significance to the people of New Jersey and New York, as well as the nation; and

"Whereas, the New York-New Jersey harbor estuary has suffered serious environmental degradation over a long period, and its condition is of concern to this State; and

"Whereas, in response to the joint petition of the Governors of New Jersey and New York, the United States Environmental Protection Agency established the New York-New Jersey Harbor Estuary Program to carry out the cooperative planning for, and management of, the New York-New Jersey harbor estuary; and

"Whereas, the State applauds the attention the estuary has received from the federal government and the continuing efforts on behalf of the estuary made by members of the New York-New Jersey Harbor Estuary Program to identify, preserve, and enhance the environmental and economic resources of the estuary, and pledges to continue its support of their activities; now, therefore,

"Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of New Jersey:

"1. The Congress of the United States is memorialized to continue existing support and funding for the New York-New Jersey Harbor Estuary Program, and for the governmental departments and agencies participating in the program, and is respectfully requested to provide additional federal funding as needed to ensure the continued development and implementation of comprehensive management plans for the estuary.

"2. Duly authenticated copies of this resolution, signed by the Speaker of the General Assembly and attested by the Clerk thereof, shall be transmitted to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the majority and minority leaders of the United States Senate and the United States House of Representatives, the Administrator of the United States Environmental Protection Agency, and the Administrator of Region II thereof, and to each member of the congressional delegation elected from the State of New Jersey."

POM-8. A petition from a citizen of Concord, New Hampshire, to protect America and the Social Security Trust Fund by eliminating the deficit-producing government waste; to the Committee on Finance.

POM–9. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Finance:

"ASSEMBLY JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 83

"Whereas, Supplemental Security Income (SSI) is a basic federal cash benefit program for persons 65 years of age and over and for blind or disabled persons of any age; and

"Whereas, California, through the State Supplementary Program for the Aged, Blind, and Disabled, supplements payments made to SSI recipients; and

"Whereas, in order to be deemed disabled for purposes of the SSI program, a doctor chosen by the state must confirm the existence of physical or mental disabilities which are expected to prevent an individual from working for 12 months or will result in death; and

"Whereas, payments to SSI recipients in California who are substance abusers have tripled since 1986, now totaling approximately $60 million annually to 7,500 recipients; and

"Whereas, the distribution of cash payments to a recipient of SSI through an irresponsible payee poses a danger to the recipient, especially if the recipient is a substance abuser; and

"Whereas, the federal government does not adequately investigate potential representative payees to determine their suitability in providing supervision of funds for mentally or physically disabled SSI recipients; and

"Whereas, California has the California Master Plan Process, an efficient, coordinated framework of drug and alcohol abuse reduction programs administered by state and local government entities and community-based organizations; and

"Whereas, the federal government fails to recognize the inherently different needs of individual state and local governments, which results in limited state flexibility in terms of treatment alternatives; now therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, Jointly, That the Legislature hereby respectfully requests the President and the Congress of the United States to review and update provisions of the federal Social Security Act to do all of the following:

"(a) Ensure that only capable, conscientious representative payees supervise the finances of mentally or physically disabled SSI recipients.

"(b) Encourage the development and expansion of innovative drug and alcohol treatment programs that recognize that the need of one state may differ considerably from those of another, thereby necessitating that state governmental policies be allowed to be tailored appropriately.

"(c) Provide for control mechanisms to ensure that the representative payees spend the funding provided for California's SSI recipients efficiently and effectively.

"(d) Require criminal background investigations on designated payees and continual review of payees to ensure the responsibility of payees, protect SSI recipients, and prevent fraud; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Chief Clerk of the Assembly transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States, to the Governor, and to the Secretary of the Health and Welfare Agency."

POM–10. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Finance:

"ASSEMBLY JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 62

"Whereas, begun in 1977, the aim of the Multipurpose Senior Services Program (MSSP) is to avoid the inappropriate placement of frail older persons in nursing facilities, and to foster independent living in their own communities; and

"Whereas, the goal of maintaining frail older persons at their maximum level of independence and in their own homes and communities has been a primary area of focus for the Department of Aging since 1984 when the Governor's Senior's Initiative, which called on the department to take the lead in establishing a system of services that vulnerable persons could use at the community level to assist in maintaining their independence for as long as possible, was enacted; and

"Whereas, the characteristics of MSSP clients do not change significantly over time, with the typical MSSP client continuing to be a very frail, low-income widow, living alone in an apartment, generally between the ages of 75 and 79 years; and

"Whereas, these people need assistance to carry out two or more of the five basic activities of daily living, such as bathing, dressing, and transferring, and five out of eight instrumental activities, such as transportation, meal preparation, and housework; and

"Whereas, the health of these persons is generally characterized by heart trouble, arteriosclerosis, and high blood pressure; and

"Whereas, the MSSP began with eight sites in 1977, and currently has 22 sites throughout the state with the ability to serve 6,000 clients at any given time, or a total of 8,941 unduplicated clients annually; and

"Whereas, the Department of Aging and the California Senior Legislature estimates there are over 30,000 seniors in California that would benefit from this program; and

"Whereas, according to the department the average cost per month for a client in the MSSP was $1,038, compared with the average nursing home cost of $1,919 during the 1989–90 fiscal year; and

"Whereas, the Torres-Felando Long-Term Care Reform Act of 1982 (Chapter 1453 of the Statutes of 1982) provides for the conditional continuation of the MSSP, as long as it proves to be cost-effective and the state can obtain federal authority to fund it through a medicaid home and community-based care waiver; and

"Whereas, the MSSP is funded by the state and the federal government on an equal basis; and

"Whereas, the last waiver expired on June 30, 1990, and since then, the MSSP has been continued through a series of 90-day extensions approved by the federal Health Care Financing Administration; and

"Whereas, on April 16, 1990, the State Department of Health Services and the Department of Aging submitted a renewal waiver request to continue the MSSP for California at the levels approved for the previous three fiscal years, with the effective dates of this new waiver request being from July 1, 1990, to June 30, 1995; and

"Whereas, on October 18, 1990, the Department of Aging also transmitted an MSSP expansion waiver request for review to the State Department of Health Services to increase the currently approved caseload of 6,000 to 12,000 clients; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California memorializes the federal Health Care Financing Administration to approve a request by the Department of Aging to allow federal medicaid funds to be used to expand California's Multipurpose Senior Services Program from serving 6,000 to 12,000 clients annually; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Chief Clerk of the Assembly transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States, and the Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration."

POM–11. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Finance:

"ASSEMBLY JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 61

"Whereas, the President of the United States has called upon the Congress to enact legislation granting a $5,000 income tax credit for first-time buyers who purchase homes before year's end that could turn an additional 250,000 families into homeowners and assist in lifting the United States from its recession; and

"Whereas, fees, exactions, conditions, environmental impact reports, and other regulations have resulted in added costs of $15,000 to $30,000 per home, thereby reducing the number of affordable homes on the market in California; and

"Whereas, such a tax credit would mitigate California's recession by spurring development and generating additional employment through suppliers, contractors, and financing; and

"Whereas, those affected most by California's high housing costs are the young, the poor, and minorities, and they are the ones who would benefit most from the proposed tax credit; and

"Whereas, the proposal for such a tax credit comes at a time when lower mortgage rates already have made houses more affordable to middle-income Americans than at any other time in the past 18 years; and

"Whereas, such a tax credit for first-time homebuyers would entice those who are currently hesitant about purchasing their first home and will boost consumer confidence by making it easier for existing homebuyers to sell their homes; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the tax credit for first-time homebuyers proposed by the President of the United States be acknowledged as vital to the economic fortunes of California and her people, to keeping the California dream of home ownership alive, and to instilling a strong sense of pride and self-esteem; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Legislature urges the Congress of the United States to pass legislation granting a $5,000 income tax credit to first-time homebuyers before the end of 1992, as requested by the President of the United States and the Secretary of Housing and urban Development; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Chief Clerk of the Assembly transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

"ASSEMBLY JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 93

"Whereas, on June 2, 1992, six people were fatally injured during the course of a high-speed chase by the United States Border Patrol in Temecula, California; and

"Whereas, similar high-speed chases conducted by officers of the federal Immigration and Naturalization Service have led to fatal accidents in recent years in southern California; and

"Whereas, the federal Immigration and Naturalization Service checkpoint south of Temecula was established in 1934, when the area's population was miniscule and the international border between California and Mexico was almost entirely rural in character; and

"Whereas, nearly 60 years later, the Temecula area is suburban in nature and its population is growing rapidly; and

"Whereas, despite this population growth, the federal Immigration and Naturalization Service has acknowledged 75 high-speed chases in and around Temecula in 1989 alone; and

"Whereas, similar situations exist in other parts of southern California and, no doubt, in other parts of the nation near the international border; and

"Whereas, illegal immigration is a misdemeanor that does not warrant the high-speed pursuit typically reserved for suspects of serious or violent crimes, especially in populated areas; and

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to direct the federal Immigration and Naturalization Service to publicly explain its high-speed chase policies and to revise those policies in the interest of public safety where appropriate, including providing alternatives to high-speed chases in populated areas; and be it further

"ASSEMBLY JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 46

"Whereas, The Congress of the United States is considering reauthorization of the Higher Education Act of 1965, the enabling legislation for all federal higher education programs, including more than $13 billion in student financial aid; and

"Whereas, Higher education will continue to be at the heart of our nation's economic productivity, as rapid technological and international developments demand new skills and new competencies; and

"Whereas, Accessible higher education is vital to democracy and civic equality, each of which is premised on a citizenry with the capacity to participate fully in society and a public that is literate and informed; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to do all of the following as part of the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act of 1965:

"(a) Expand grant assistance for needy students by significantly increasing funding authorizations for the Pell Grant and State Student Incentive Grant programs, restoring the purchasing power of financial aid by raising the maximum Pell Grant award and providing for future annual inflationary adjustments, and increasing the number of Pell Grant awards to assist a greater proportion of the nation's eligible needy students.

"(b) Reform the student loan programs by creating a direct institutional lending pilot program to supplement existing loan programs, and exploring the feasibility of a national student loan bank, coupling increased loan maximums with new authority for institutions to restrict loan eligibility, offering flexible repayment options to reduce default and minimize disincentives to enter public service employment, and consolidating the myriad deferment categories.

"(c) Simplify the financial aid application process by offering a simple needs test for very low income applicants and an application bypass for recipients of public assistance, establishing and funding a national student aid data base, consolidating the Congressional and Pell Grant program needs analysis methodologies, and replacing elements such as the displaced homemaker, dislocated worker, and ward-of-the-court categories with expanded reliance on the professional judgment of campus financial aid officers.

"(d) Curtail federal encroachment on states and campuses by avoiding administrative mandates unrelated to the determination of financial need and academic eligibility, and replacing board regulation with negotiated rulemaking targeted directly at actual abuses. States must retain the authority to ensure access to public colleges and universities without student eligibility for aid being conditioned upon passing a federally imposed admission test.

"(e) Eliminate fees charged to students seeking financial aid, including application fees, loan insurance premiums, and loan origination fees.

"(f) Expand opportunity throughout education by augmenting the special programs for students from disadvantaged backgrounds, reaffirming the authority of institutions to target nonfederal aid, and increasing authorization levels for programs to enlarge and diversify the pool of graduate students moving into the ranks of school and college instructors, and increasing early information and outreach to elementary and junior high school pupils.

"(g) Maximize the effectiveness of available resources by enhancing the dissemination of information on financial aid to prospective students and parents, and increasing early information and outreach to elementary and junior high school pupils.

"(h) Ensure that students and the federal aid programs are protected from fraud and abuse by ensuring that federally recognized state licensure, federally established consumer protection standards, and nongovernmental accreditation provide for, at a minimum, all of the following:

"(1) Enforcement of minimum standards of instructional quality, institutional stability, ethical practices, health and safety, and fiscal responsibility.

"(2) Prohibitions against the granting of false or misleading educational credentials or the dissemination of misleading literature or advertising.

"(3) Protections for students against fraud, misrepresentation, or other practices which may lead to an improper loss of funds paid for educational costs.

"(4) A path for the development of institutions offering fields of study or methods of instruction and innovative delivery systems not previously recognized, such as distance learning; and be it further

"Resolved, That efforts by states and nongovernmental accrediting agencies to enforce additional standards beyond those necessary to ensure that an institution is capable of meeting the requirements of federal programs should not be among the factors considered by the Secretary of Education for recognition; and be it further

"Whereas, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act (OBRA) of 1990, Public Law 101-508, reduced the pension benefits for single veterans in Medi-Cal funded nursing homes from $950 per month to $90 per month; and

"Whereas, in annual terms the pension was reduced from $11,400 per year to $1,080 per year, and

"Whereas, with respect to the veteran who uses his or her pension to pay for his or her nursing home care, OBRA effectively shifted the cost of the veteran's care from the veteran's pension to Medi-Cal; and

ORDER FOR RECESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, upon the conclusion of my remarks which I am about to make, brief remarks, that the Senate stand in recess as under the previous order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STRATEGIC OFFENSIVE ARMS AGREEMENT OF JANUARY 3, 1993

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the START II Treaty signed on January 3 this year ushers in the prospect of a more secure world. It is a great credit to President Bush that he has continued to pursue the treaty to its successful signing. I take this occasion to offer my congratulations and my high tribute to President Bush. His action on this treaty is historic in scope and signification.

This treaty will lead to a reduction of almost three-quarters of nuclear weapons from current levels. Most important of all, all warheads for first-strike heavy intercontinental ballistic missiles are slated for elimination, and all multiple independently targeted reentry vehicles are slated for elimination, both by no later than the year 2003.

This is an unprecedented breakthrough for the security of the world. Ever since their development, both intercontinental ballistic weapons and MIRV'd weapons escalated the nuclear arms race. For more than 30 years, Presidents of both parties have sought to reduce the risk these weapons brought to the world.

Until the breakup of the Soviet Union, those efforts met with limited success and, indeed, with some setbacks. The breakup of the Soviet Union provided an opportunity that did not previously exist and President Bush took advantage of that opportunity with skill and energy.

A little more than 3 months ago, the Senate ratified the first START Treaty. The speed with which we are now able to consider its successor is encouraging. President-elect Clinton has expressed the hope of early Senate action on this treaty, and I assure him that it will be expeditiously and thoroughly considered, as it should be.

The treaty is important for the direct effects it will have on the world's two greatest nuclear arsenals. But it is also an important starting point for us to work with other nuclear powers and aspiring nuclear powers.

The enormous reductions this treaty will make in those weapons within the United States and former Soviet arsenals is a factor that can and must be used to continue the movement away from weapons of mass destruction and toward a more stable and secure world order.

The START II Treaty is not the only action, nor is it the last action we must take with respect to controlling nuclear proliferation.

A comprehensive nuclear test ban remains an important goal. So does the international nonproliferation regime. We must remain vigilant that the terms of the treaty are fulfilled.

So the treaty does not close the books on nuclear weapons issues. But it is an important step in eliminating the nuclear sword that has hung over humanity's head for almost half a century, and it is a very good omen for the beginning of a new year.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Tuesday, January 5, 1993

This being the day fixed by the 20th amendment of the Constitution for the annual meeting of the Congress of the United States, the Members-elect of the 103d Congress met in their Hall, and at 12 noon were called to order by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, the Honorable Donnald K. Anderson.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

With gratefulness and praise, we give You thanks, O God, for this new day and for all the opportunities we have for doing the acts of justice and the deeds of compassion. We pray, gracious God, that we may be worthy of the high calling that has been given us and faithful to the responsibilities that are entrusted to us.

May Your blessing, O God, that is new every morning, be with us this day that we will be the people You would have us be and do those good things that honor You and serve all the people.

The Lord bless us and keep us.

The Lord make His face shine upon us and be gracious unto us.

The Lord lift up His countenance upon us and give us peace. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The CLERK. Will the Members-elect and their guests please rise and join with us in the Pledge of Allegiance.

The Clerk led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

> I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

The CLERK. Representatives-elect, this is the day fixed by the 20th amendment to the Constitution and Public Law 102–475 for the meeting of the 103d Congress and, as the law directs, the Clerk of the House has prepared the official roll of the Representatives-elect.

Certificates of election covering 435 seats in the 103d Congress have been received by the Clerk of the House, and the names of those persons whose credentials show that they were regularly elected as Representatives in accordance with the laws of their respective States or of the United States will be called.

Without objection, the Representatives-elect will record their presence by electronic device and their names will be reported in alphabetical order by States, beginning with the State of Alabama, to determine whether a quorum is present.

There was no objection.

The call was taken by electronic device, and the following Representatives-elect responded to their names:

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—2

NOT VOTING—1

Applegate

□ 1240

The CLERK. The tellers agree in their tallies that the total number of votes cast is 431, of which the Honorable THOMAS S. FOLEY of the State of Washington has received 255 and the Honorable ROBERT H. MICHEL of the State of Illinois has received 174, with 2 voting "present".

Therefore, the Honorable THOMAS S. FOLEY of the State of Washington is duly elected Speaker of the House of Representatives for the 103d Congress, having received a majority of the votes cast.

The Clerk appoints the following committee to escort the Speaker-elect to the chair: The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL]; the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT]; the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH]; the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR]; the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER]; the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARMEY]; the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS]; and the gentlewoman from Washington [Ms. DUNN].

The committee will retire from the Chamber to escort the Speaker-elect to the chair.

□ 1330

The Doorkeeper announced the Speaker-elect of the House of Representatives of the 103d Congress, who was escorted to the chair by the committee of escort.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and guests of the House, as you know, the Speaker of the House is the third-highest elected official in our country and third in succession to the Presidency. It is, therefore, a very high honor to be chosen as your party's nominee for Speaker.

So my first obligation, pleasant one as it is, is to extend my thanks and appreciation to my Republican colleagues for the high honor that you accord me in being your nominee. And to you, Mr. Speaker, I congratulate you again, and if I may, I would like to make a couple of brief observations.

We welcome to the House the largest number of Members of the freshman class, 110, a 25-percent turnover of our membership, and in this Member's view, this large, talented freshman class is more than just a group of new Members. It is a commitment to renewal; it is a pledge of reform; it is a promise of hope for the House. But the freshman class cannot by itself bring about reform and renewal or responsiveness.

That is a task that must be undertaken by the entire House, the leadership of both parties, every faction, all ideologies, every single Member of this body. And for those of us who regard serving in this House as a high, noble calling, we have a special obligation to do our best to restore the American people's confidence in their legislative branch of government, and as the Republican leader, I pledge myself and all our Members to that end.

With a new Democratic President coming into office, the dynamics of power will change in this House. But basic principles must endure if we are to truly have a reformed and effective institution, and chief among these is the belief that the principle of minority rights is equal in dignity and in importance and in no way subservient to the principle of majority rule.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me just say that here we are participants in a ceremony of harmonious civility and comity. However, within an hour in the debate on the rules for this Congress, we will be forcefully opposing each other's views on a number of provisions, and those differing arguments will continue throughout this Congress on many issues. That is the way it is. That is what this body is all about.

But in every instance, ceremonial or political, mutual respect and personal good will should be at the heart of our endeavors.

So, Members-elect, I deem it a very high privilege and honor to present to the House the Speaker-elect of the 103d Congress, the distinguished gentleman from the great State of Washington, my dear friend, TOM FOLEY.

[Applause, the Members rising.]

Mr. FOLEY. Thank you very much, BOB MICHEL, and my thanks to this House for the honor of being allowed again to be Speaker in this coming Congress.

All of us, I think, share a sense of great respect for the distinguished Republican leader, BOB MICHEL, who has throughout his entire service reflected the best traditions of this House and has provided an example of patriotism, decency, and reasonable leadership in every year in which he has served. I deem it one of the great honors of my opportunity to be Speaker to serve again with the distinguished Republican leader, BOB MICHEL.

My first thoughts are those of gratitude and appreciation to the 600,000 constituents from eastern Washington who I have the honor to represent.

I think all of us share the view that the greatest honor that can come to us in our political careers and lifetimes is the opportunity to serve our fellow citizens as Representatives in Congress, the title we proudly hold in this body.

That does not diminish my great appreciation to each of you, to my wife, and to all who have served with me over these years and made it possible for me to stand before you today.

We are beginning a historic new Congress. As BOB MICHEL noted, we have a greater percentage of new Members than at any time since the end of World War II; 25 percent of our number are new to this body. They represent a better and more reflective representation of this country, of the peoples across this great Nation, than any other Congress in our history.

We can initially be very proud of that; but we also have a concern, all of us, I think, that the American people have signaled their impatience with the pace of reform and change that they expect this Congress to advance in the coming years. There is an impatience that we have not moved fast enough or effectively enough to deal with the national deficit; to deal with the fairness, advancement and growth of our economic system; to deal with the problems of our health system that still denies to millions of Americans adequate and affordable care, to provide educational opportunity for all of our citizens, to build our physical infrastructure, to reduce crime; and to attack the problems of drugs and other social ills.

This Congress will have a great challenge and a great opportunity in seeking to restore the confidence of the American people in the legislative branch and in its association with the new President, Bill Clinton.

We will have a new President but may I say with honesty and sincerity that I had and have great respect for the President of the United States, George Bush, and that I have sought in the time I have been Speaker to work with the President to advance the interests of our Nation.

As he leaves office, I think President Bush carries with him the great respect and gratitude of the American people.

As we welcome the new President, who has gone before the country with an agenda of change, with a program of dealing with the problems and ills of the Nation, we owe him, all of us, our best efforts and support.

During a meeting not too long ago with the joint bipartisan leadership, President-elect Clinton said that he wished to be a good partner with the Congress in dealing with all of the challenges that lay ahead. I responded, on your behalf, that the Congress would be a good partner with him in all of these efforts.

We have an opportunity, we have a challenge, and we are under the close scrutiny of the American people who, 2 years hence, will have their own opportunity to make their judgment on each one of us and on the work of this Congress.

Above me inscribed on the wall of this Chamber are the words of Webster. They may not be easy to read from where you are sitting, so permit me to read them to you.

The inscription says:

> Let us develop the resources of our land, call forth its great powers, build up its institutions, promote all of its great interests, and see whether we also, in our time and generation, may not perform something worthy to be remembered.

Let us, all of us, pledge today that when this Congress comes to an end 2 years hence we may all proudly say that we have done something worthy to be remembered.

I am now ready to take the oath of office. I ask the dean of the House of Representatives, the Honorable JAMIE L. WHITTEN of Mississippi, to administer the oath of office.

Mr. WHITTEN then administered the oath of office to Mr. FOLEY of Washington as follows:

Do you solemnly swear that you will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that you will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that you take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, and that you will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which you are about to enter. So help you God.

(Applause, the Members rising.)

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS

The SPEAKER. According to the precedent, the Chair will swear in all Members of the House at this time.

If the Members will rise, the Chair will now administer the oath of office.

The Members-elect and Delegates-elect and the Resident Commissioner-elect rose, and the Speaker administered the oath of office to them, as follows:

Do you solemnly swear that you will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that you will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that you take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, and that you will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which you are about to enter. So help you God.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen and gentlewomen are now Members of the 103d Congress. Congratulations.

"2. In a Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the Resident Commissioner to the United States from Puerto Rico and each Delegate to the House shall possess the same powers and privileges as Members of the House.".

(10) In clause 5 of rule XIII, strike "clause 4 of rule XXVII" and insert in lieu thereof "clause 3 of rule XXVII".

(11) In clause 5 of rule XV—

(a) insert "(a)" before the first sentence;

(b) strike the last two sentences; and

(c) add the following new paragraph at the end:

"(b) The Speaker may, in his discretion, reduce to not less than five minutes the time within which a rollcall vote by electronic device may be taken—

"(2) after a rollcall vote has been ordered on an amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, on any subsequent amendment to that bill or resolution reported from the Committee of the Whole; or

"(3) after a rollcall vote has been ordered on a motion to recommit a bill, resolution, or conference report thereon, on the question of passage or adoption, as the case may be, of such bill, resolution, or conference report thereon, if the question of passage or adoption follows without intervening business the vote on the motion to recommit.".

(12) In rule XXI, strike clause 8.

(13) In clause 1(a) of rule XXIII, insert "Member, Resident Commissioner, or Delegate as" before "Chairman".

(14) At the end of clause 2 of rule XXIII, add the following new paragraph:

"(d) Whenever a recorded vote on any question has been decided by a margin within which the votes cast by the Delegates and the Resident Commissioner have been decisive, the Committee of the Whole shall automatically rise and the Speaker shall put that question de novo without intervening debate or other business. Upon the announcement of the vote on that question, the Committee of the Whole shall resume its sitting without intervening motion.".

(15) In clause 1(c) of rule XXVIII, strike "(but only on the day after the calendar day on which the Member making the motion announces to the House his intention to do so and the form of the motion)" and insert in lieu thereof "(but in either case only at a time or place designated by the Speaker in the legislative schedule of the day after the calendar day on which the Member offering the motion announces to the House his intention to do so and the form of the motion)".

(16) In clause 2(b) of rule XXVIII, insert "(1)" after "(b)" and add the following new subparagraph at the end:

"(2) During consideration of such an amendment to a general appropriation bill, if the original motion offered by the floor manager proposes to change existing law, then pending such original motion and before debate thereon one motion to insist on disagreement to the amendment proposed by the Senate shall be preferential to any other motion to dispose of that amendment if offered by the chairman of a committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter of the amendment or by a designee. Such a preferential motion shall be separately debatable for one hour equally divided between its proponent and the proponent of the original motion. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on such a preferential motion to its adoption without intervening motion.".

(17) Amend rule XXX to read as follows:

"USE OF EXHIBITS.

"When the use of any exhibit in debate is objected to by any Member, it shall be determined without debate by a vote of the House."

(18) In rule XLVI, amend clause 4 to read as follows:

"4. A Member may not send any mass mailing outside the congressional district from which the Member was elected.".

(19) Amend rule LI to read as follows:

"EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES.

"1. The Committee on House Administration shall have authority to issue rules and regulations applying the rights and protections of the Fair Labor Standards Act in the House, including, but not limited to, determination of exemption categories, permitting the use of compensatory time as compensation under the maximum work week provisions of the Act, describing the recordkeeping requirements and providing that such recordkeeping provisions do not apply with respect to employees exempted pursuant to the Committee's Rules and Regulations.

"nondiscrimination in employment

"2. (a) Personnel actions affecting employment positions in the House of Representatives shall be made free from discrimination based on race, color, national origin, religion, sex (including marital or parental status), disability, or age.

"(b) Interpretations under paragraph (a) shall reflect the principles of current law, as generally applicable to employment.

"(c) Paragraph (a) does not prohibit the taking into consideration of—

"(1) the domicile of an individual with respect to a position under the clerk-hire allowance; or

"(2) the political affiliation of an individual with respect to a position under the clerk-hire allowance or a position on the staff of a committee or a position under all support offices, except as otherwise stated in the Rules of the House of Representatives.

"procedure

"3. The procedure for consideration of alleged violations of clause 2 consists of three steps as follows:

"(a) step I, Counseling and Mediation, as set forth in clause 5;

"(b) step II, Formal Complaint, Hearing, and Review by the Office of Fair Employment Practices, as set forth in clause 6; and

"(c) step III, Final Review by Review Panel, as set forth in clause 7.

"office of fair employment practices

"4. There is established an Office of Fair Employment Practices (hereafter in this rule referred to as the "Office"), which shall carry out functions assigned under this rule. Employees and Hearing Officers of the Office shall be appointed by, and serve at the pleasure of, the Chairman and the ranking minority party member of the Committee on House Administration, acting jointly, and shall be under the administrative direction of the Clerk of the House of Representatives. The Office shall be located in the District of Columbia.

"step i: counseling and mediation

"5. (a) An individual aggrieved by an alleged violation of clause 2 may request counseling by counselors in the Office, who shall provide information with respect to rights and related matters under that clause. A request for counseling shall be made not later than one hundred and eighty days after the alleged violation and may be oral or written, at the option of the individual. The period for counseling is thirty days, unless the employee and the Office agree to reduce the time period. The Office may not notify the employing authority of the counseling before the beginning of mediation or the filing of a formal complaint, whichever occurs first.

"(b) If, after counseling, the individual desires to proceed, the Office shall attempt to resolve the alleged violation through mediation between the individual and the employing authority.

"step ii: formal complaint, hearing, and review by the office of fair employment practices

"6. (a) Not later than thirty days after the end of the counseling period, the individual may file a formal complaint with the Office. Not later than ten days after filing the formal complaint, the individual may file with the Office a written request for a hearing on the complaint.

"(b) The hearing shall be conducted—

"(1) not later than forty days after filing of the written request under paragraph (a);

"(2) on the record by a Hearing Officer of the Office appointed under the procedures set forth in clause 4; and

"(3) to the greatest extent practicable, in accordance with the principles and procedures set forth in sections 555 and 556 of title 5, United States Code.

"(c) Not later than thirty days after the hearing, the Office shall issue a written decision to the parties. The decision shall clearly state the issues raised by the complaint, and shall contain a determination as to whether a violation of clause 2 has occurred.

"step iii: final review by review panel

"7. (a) In General. Not later than twenty days after issuance of the decision under clause 6, any party may seek formal review of the decision by filing a written request with the Office. The formal review shall be conducted by a panel constituted at the beginning of each Congress and composed of—

"(1) two elected officers or employees of the House of Representatives, appointed by the Speaker;

"(2) two employees of the House of Representatives appointed by the minority leader of the House of Representatives;

"(3) two members of the Committee on House Administration (one of whom shall be appointed as chairman of the panel), appointed by the Chairman of that Committee; and

"(4) two members of the Committee on House Administration, appointed by the ranking minority party member of that Committee.

If any member of the panel withdraws from a particular review, the appointing authority for such member shall appoint another officer, employee, or Member of the House of Representatives, as the case may be, to be a temporary member of the panel for purposes of that review only.

"(b) The review under this clause shall consist of a hearing (conducted in the manner described in clause 6(b)(3)), if such hearing is considered necessary by the panel, and an examination of the record, together with any statements or other documents the panel deems appropriate. A tie vote by the panel is an affirmation of the decision of the Office. The panel shall complete the review and submit a written decision to the parties and to the Committee on House Administration not later than sixty days after filing of the request under paragraph (a), except that when the House has adjourned sine die, in which case an extension of up to sixty additional days is authorized.

"resolution by agreement

"8. If, after a formal complaint is filed under clause 6, the parties resolve the issues involved, the parties shall enter into a written agreement, which shall be effective—

"(1) in the case of a matter under review by the Office under clause 6, if approved by the Office; and

"(2) in the case of a matter under review by a panel under clause 7, if approved by the panel.

"remedies

"9. The Office or a review panel, as the case may be, may order one or more of the following remedies:

"(a) monetary compensation, to be paid from the clerk-hire allowance of a Member, or from personnel finds of a committee of the House or other entity, as appropriate;

"(b) monetary compensation, to be paid from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives;

"(c) injunctive relief;

"(d) costs and attorney fees; and

"(e) employment, reinstatement to employment, or promotion (with or without back pay).

"costs of attending hearings

"10. An individual with respect to whom a hearing is held under this rule shall be reimbursed for actual and reasonable costs of attending the hearing, if the individual resides outside the location of the hearing. Witnesses required to attend the hearings by the Hearing Officer as necessary to a fair and justiciable hearing shall be reimbursed for actual and reasonable costs of attending the hearing if they reside outside the location of the hearing. Expenses are to be paid from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

"prohibition of intimidation

"11. Any intimidation of, or reprisal against, any person by an employing authority because of the exercise of a right under this rule is a violation of clause 2.

"closed hearings and confidentiality

"12. All hearings under this rule shall be closed. All information relating to any procedure under this rule is confidential, except that a decision of the Office under clause 6 or a decision of a review panel under clause 7 shall be published, if the decision constitutes a final disposition of the matter.

"exclusivity of procedures and remedies

"13. The procedures and remedies under this rule are exclusive except to the extent that the Rules of the House of Representatives and the Rules of the House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct provide for additional procedures and remedies.

"requests for witnesses and information

"14. The Office of Fair Employment Practices and the Fair Employment Practices Review Panel may issue, and the addressees shall comply with, written requests for the production of documents and the attendance of witnesses, if such requests are necessary and relevant to the proper examination of the issues.

"internal procedures for resolution of possible violations

"15. It is the policy of the House of Representatives to encourage each employing authority to establish internal procedures for examining and resolving possible violations of this rule. To the greatest extent practicable, the Office of Fair Employment Practices shall take such action (consistent with the rights of the parties) as may be necessary to encourage initial use of such procedures.

"definitions

"16. As used in this rule—

"(a) the term "employment position" means, with respect to the House of Representatives, a position the pay for which is disbursed by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, or other official designated by the House of Representatives, and any employment position in a legislative service organization or other entity that is paid through funds derived from the clerk-hire allowance;

"(b) the term "employing authority" means, the Member of the House of Representatives or elected officer of the House of Representatives, or the Director of the Congressional Budget Office, with the power to appoint the employee;

"(c) the term "Member of the House of Representatives" means a Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress; and

"(d) the term "elected officer of the House of Representatives"'means an elected officer of the House of Representatives (other than the Speaker and the Chaplain).".

(20) Strike rules LII and LIII.

Mr. GEPHARDT (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I was looking for a copy of the final resolution that is before us. I have just been handed House Resolution 00, dated January 00, 1993.

Mr. Speaker, is this the final resolution?

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOLOMON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I would assume that the Clerk has the resolution available.

Mr. SOLOMON. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, we were given earlier a change dealing with the Delegate voting, and that is incorporated in this copy; is that correct?

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOLOMON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, that is correct.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we have not really had a chance to review this.

As I understand, Mr. Speaker, we have just been delivered these rules moments ago, we have not seen them, and I understand there were changes made earlier today in the caucus. We have a copy here of one change that was made with regard to the Delegate issue. Is that the only change made by the caucus this morning?

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, that is correct.

Mr. WALKER. That is correct, and so virtually everything else in the package is exactly the same as it has been discussed before, with the exception of the Delegate issue, and that is in this package in the modified form from this morning; is that right?

Mr. GEPHARDT. That is correct.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. GEPHARDT. For purposes of debate only, Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to refer at the desk, and I am seeking to be recognized for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. A motion to refer the resolution would be an appropriate motion.

MOTION TO REFER OFFERED BY MR. SOLOMON

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SOLOMON moves to refer the resolution to a select committee of five members, to be appointed by the Speaker, not more than three of whom shall be from the same political party, with instructions not to report back the same until it has conducted a full and complete study of, and made a determination on, the constitutionality of those provisions which would grant voting rights in the Committee of the Whole to the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico and the Delegates from American Samoa, the District of Columbia, Guam and the Virgin Islands.

MOTION TO TABLE OFFERED BY MR. GEPHARDT

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GEPHARDT moves to lay on the table the motion to refer.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT] to lay on the table the motion to refer offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 224, nays 176, not voting 31, as follows:

Messrs. SMITH of Oregon, JOHNSON of South Dakota, and FRANK of Massachusetts changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

Messrs. MANTON, GREEN of Texas, VENTO, PALLONE, DEUTSCH, and PETERSON of Florida changed their vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the motion to table the motion to refer was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 30 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York [Ms. SLAUGHTER], and I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON], on behalf of the minority.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from New York [Ms. SLAUGHTER].

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 5 contains changes to the Rules of the House of Representatives recommended for inclusion in the rules of the House for the 103d Congress. I would like to take a few minutes to briefly summarize the proposed changes in the resolution.

But first, I would like to thank those who have worked diligently over the better part of 2 years to develop this reform package. Combined with changes adopted by the Democratic caucus in December, these proposals are designed to make the House, its committees, and Members work more efficiently and effectively. We believe that they are a major step in the right direction. We also look forward to the report of the Joint Committee on the Organization of Congress for additional recommendations.

The first amendment in House Resolution 5 would delete from the rules the archaic procedures of teller votes. Teller votes are a remnant of earlier days of the House, particularly before recorded votes were allowed in the Committee of the Whole. This rule change would in no way affect the use of tellers or other means of voting in the event of a breakdown of the electronic voting system and fully protects a Member's right to question the Chair's determination of the outcome of a voice vote.

The second amendment would add two new clauses to House Rule I, duties of the Speaker. The first would implement a requirement of House Resolution 423, the House Administrative Reform Resolution of 1992, to establish an office of General Counsel. The Office would be independent and perform its duties on a totally professional and nonpartisan basis.

Currently, at the end of the session, the Speaker by special rule is often given the authority to declare recesses subject to the call of the Chair. This allows some flexibility when the next order of business is not ready for floor action. The second clause to be added to House rule I would give the Speaker the flexibility to declare short recesses throughout the session when no question is pending before the House.

The third amendment recodifies current rules LII and LIII as a new rule VI. With respect to those nonlegislative functions which have been, or are to be, transferred to the Director of Non-Legislative and Financial Service by the Committee on House Administration, including those specifically identified by the House in House Resolution 423 of the 102d Congress, it is the intent of the changes in House rules adopted pursuant to that resolution and incorporated in this resolution, House Resolution 5, that the employee positions that correspond to those functions should be treated by the committee and by the Director in the same fashion under the House Employee Position Classification Act as they would have been treated if they remained under the direction of the Officers of the House from whom these functions were transferred.

The next amendment makes changes in House consideration of question of privileges of the House to ensure that all points of view are heard on the resolutions and to allow for scheduling debate on such resolutions so as not to unnecessarily disrupt the House's scheduled legislative business.

Floor time on resolutions concerning the privileges of the House would be divided between the proponent of the motion and the leadership of the party in opposition to the motion as determined by the Speaker. The amendment would require notice of the resolution and require the Speaker to schedule consideration of the resolution within 2 legislative days. An exception to this general procedure would be that the minority or majority leader could personally offer a resolution as a question of the privileges of the Houses at any time in order to deal with serious problems regarding the integrity of the House which require immediate attention.

The proposed amendment would not change the precedence of resolutions reported by the Official Standards Committee as a question of the privileges of the House, blue-slip resolutions, or questions of personal privileges.

The fifth amendment would rename the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs as the Committee on Natural Resources. It would also make a series of technical and conforming changes in clause 1 of rule X including deleting an obsolete provision relating to the tenure of the ranking minority member of the Budget Committee and updating references to executive branch entities.

The Speaker and the chairman and ranking member of the House Administration Committee have agreed upon amendment 6 to provide for the application of the standard parliamentary procedure regarding tie votes in the bipartisan Subcommittee on Administrative Oversight. The proposed amendment would retain the current notification requirements to the Speaker, majority leader, minority leader, and House Administration chair and ranking member whenever a matter cannot be resolved because of a tie vote in the subcommittee.

□ 1430

It is currently within the discretion of the Speaker to appoint members to conference committees and select committees. Amendment seven would give the Speaker the authority to remove members or add additional members to those committees.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, would the gentlewoman yield on that point?

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I would be happy later, if I could do it on the gentleman's time. I would like to finish my statement first, since we are limited.

Mr. WALKER. So we are not going to have a discussion of the rules?

Ms. SLAUGHTER. I would like to finish my statement first, if I may.

Current House rules allow the Speaker to appoint delegates and the Resident Commissioner only to conference committees on legislation reported from committees on which they serve. Amendment seven would also allow the Speaker to appoint the Resident Commissioner and the delegates to any conference committee.

The final portion of amendment seven would repeal the provision providing permanent authorization for the Select Committee on Aging.

Amendment eight includes two provisions to help committees work more productively. The first would eliminate the limitation on committees meeting while the House is sitting under the 5-minute amendment rule. This change should give committees more flexibility in scheduling meetings to avoid interruptions and ensure the presence of a quorum.

The second provision provides that on a rollcall vote by a committee to report a bill, the records of the committee are dispositive with respect to the question of whether a quorum was present. With regard to measures reported by unanimous consent or voice votes, the provision would prohibit a point of order on the House floor asserting the absence of a reporting quorum unless the point of order was timely made in committee.

Amendment nine would revise House rule XII dealing with the status of Delegates and the Resident Commissioner. The revised text would consolidate the existing two clauses into one and add a new clause providing that the Delegates and Resident Commissioner would exercise the same powers and privileges as Members in the Committee of the Whole.

The Delegates and the Resident Commissioners represent 4.6 million Americans who now have no voting representation in the House other than in the standing committees on which their Members serve. This lack of representation is undemocratic. This amendment would allow these Americans to be represented in the preliminary decisions of the House through votes in the Committee of the Whole.

Amendment 10 would merely correct a reference to a redesignated rule.

Amendment 11 would add to the list of occasions when the Speaker has the discretion if recorded votes follow one after another to reduce the time for Members to vote from 15 to 5 minutes on votes after the first vote.

This proposed change would add an additional such situation to the list: A recorded vote on the rule after there has been a recorded vote on the previous question on the rule. This reduction in voting time can only occur when there has been no intervening business between the votes. The rationale is to expedite the business of the House by reducing the total minimum time for the two successive votes from 30 to 20 minutes.

Amendment 12 would strike clause 8 of rule XXI which states that a CBO cost estimate must be included in the text of any measure increasing, decreasing, or providing direct spending or receipts. Clause 8 of rule XXI proved to be difficult to implement; its repeal leaves in place the requirement, in House rules and the Budget Act, that whenever a committee reports a spending or revenue measure, a CBO cost estimate must be included in the accompanying report.

The next amendment would insert language in clause 1(a) of rule XXIII specifically authorizing a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to preside over the Committee of the Whole. While the current rule does not bar a Delegate or Resident Commissioner from presiding over the Committee of the Whole, in practice none ever has. The amendment would have the effect of overriding the previous tradition against appointing them.

Amendment 14 would allow the House to review all decisions of the Committee of the Whole on which the votes of the Resident Commissioner and the Delegates were decisive. This amendment would provide for an automatic de novo vote in the full House whenever the Delegate and Resident Commissioner votes were determinative of the margin. This rules change will ensure that Members' rights will not be affected by giving the Delegates and the Resident Commissioner the right to vote in the Committee of the Whole.

Amendment 15 extends the current 1-day notice requirement for motions to instruct to the motion to discharge conferees and to appoint new conferees. In addition, the proposal would clarify that the Speaker has the authority to designate the time in the legislative schedule of the next day when these motions will be considered by the House.

The next amendment is designed to address the problem of Senate amendments to appropriations bills which contain legislative language. If an amendment in technical disagreement to an appropriations bill conference report proposes to change existing law, then a motion to insist on disagreement to the amendment shall have preference, if made by the chairman of a committee having jurisdiction over the subject matter of the amendment. The motion would be debated for 1 hour divided between its proponent and the proponents of the original motion to dispose of the amendment. It is hoped that this procedure will both deter and allow the House to better consider Senate legislative language in appropriations bills.

Amendment 17 would strike the ability to vote on whether a Member may read from papers while retaining the House's ability to prohibit the use of inappropriate exhibits. The original rule has become obsolete as modern practice provided other means to limit debate. However, under the proposed language the House would retain the right to vote on granting its consent for the use of an exhibit to which a Member objects.

Amendment 18 would conform House rules to the franking provisions adopted in Public Law 102-392, legislative branch appropriations for fiscal year 1993, which bars mass mailing under the congressional frank to areas outside the district from which the Member was elected.

The penultimate amendment codifies in House rules rather than by reference the House Fair Employment Practices Resolution. The amendment also includes some changes in the way the Office of Fair Employment Practice operates, incorporating suggestions from Members who have served on the review panel.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the last amendment would strike rules LII and LIII which have been recodified as rule VI.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of this package of rule changes. As a group they will allow the House to operate more effectively and productively. At the same time they protect the rights and privileges of all House Members.

In order for Members to fully understand the large number of amendments incorporated into the resolution, I prefer to complete my full explanatory statement before answering questions. I certainly will remain on the floor should the gentleman or gentlewoman wish to pose questions on his or her own time.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if, before yielding time, I might just ask the majority leader if he would engage in a brief colloquy.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman, yes, certainly I will.

Mr. SOLOMON. I would just say to my good friend, the majority leader, we do see the only change in the Democrat caucus referral to this resolution, but since we have received it, we have received questions from an overwhelming number of our freshman Members, and we have 47 on this side, and I think the gentleman has almost as many, and 30 minutes of debate on this side just does not allow time for the Members to ask the questions or to be heard.

It is possible to extend the debate for 30 minutes with 15 minutes allotted to each side, which would give us 45 minutes of debate time?

Mr. GEPHARDT. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SOLOMON. Since the gentleman yielded for debate purposes only, I wonder if he would make that unanimous-consent request. We certainly would appreciate it.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be 15 minutes of additional time allotted to each side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to just briefly read some headlines that have appeared across this country in recent days. "The Democrats' Greedy Power Grab." "Have the House Democrats No Shame?" "The Democrats's First Order of Business is a Power Grab That Short-Circuits the Constitution." "Fodder for the Trough of Power," and it goes on and on. Who wrote these articles? They appeared as editorials in the New York Times, USA Today, and the Chicago Tribune, by syndicated columnists David Broder, George Wills, and distinguished constitutional lawyers such as Bruce Fein.

Mr. Speaker, I want to welcome my colleagues and America to our biennial exercise in futility when we are supposed to be debating and voting on rules that will guide this House and its committees for the next 2 years.

And yet, with only 1½ hours of debate, and no opportunities for amendments, this is a futile exercise, not only for the Republican minority but, ladies and gentlemen, for new Democrats who would like to better understand our rules and change them for the better like they campaigned for out there.

More importantly, this exercise symbolizes the futility that the American people feel about their government, about their Congress, and about their House of Representatives.

The American people thought last November they were voting for a change. Where is it? Instead, on this opening day of the new Congress, the only change that they are getting is being shortchanged by those editorial headlines they just heard.

My Democratic colleagues, you had a golden opportunity in this resolution today to reform this House, but you blew it. You were bought off by a promise to consider further reforms in 60 days, or maybe by a joint committee, or maybe never. What happens if you never get the opportunity for the next 2 years?

What have you brought us instead? You want to dilute your own votes by giving non-Member delegates representing non-taxpayers the right to raise American taxes to decide how that money is spent.

You want to permit your committees to sit while the House is considering amendments to important legislation on this floor.

You want to allow your committee chairmen to report bills without a majority of your members even being present at those meetings, using so-called rolling quorums or drop-by voting. You know, if you feel like it, come by an cast a vote. Otherwise we will just pass it anyway.

You want to give the Speaker authority to remove Members from a conference committee without House approval as is now required. In other words, if you are not a yes man, the Speaker will just pluck you off that conference.

What is going on around here? You want to permit the Speaker to delay for up to 2 days debates and votes on important questions of privilege involving House scandals, and how to deal with them, and God knows we have had enough of that around here.

My colleagues, this is not reform. This is business as usual, only worse. I am embarrassed to stand up here right now.

Mr. Speaker, on our side we have a Republican substitute which has had no publicity whatsoever and will have no debate on this floor. It is called a mandate for change in the People's House. It is a special, comprehensive, 48-point plan to address real weaknesses of this House and reform this place so that you and I can be proud of it.

But we will not even be able to offer it or debate it or vote on it. Democrats have already been instructed, and Members saw the last vote, to block consideration of our package on a procedural vote. For shame, for shame, for shame.

Welcome to the Democrat version of democracy. To paraphrase one of our founders, "Here, sir, the people don't rule."

I would urge my colleagues to vote down this previous question coming soon so that we can at least offer our substitute in a fair and open debate so that the American people can see it, and hear it. Failing that, vote for our motion to commit. Please listen to this. Vote for our motion to commit to put term limits on committee chairmen and ranking Republican minority members.

What kind of a message will that send to the American people? They would love it. And then delete this egregious delegate voting provision that would allow non-Members of Congress who pay no Federal income taxes to cast votes to raise taxes on the rest of the American people.

New Members of Congress, wherever you are at your receptions out there, this is one of those issues that will come back to bite you in the seat of the pants, and your political careers could come to an end. I want you to think about that, and I want you to do what is right for this institution.

We love it. Let us make it something we can be proud of.

Mr. Speaker, I include for the RECORD extraneous material on this issue, as follows:

[From The New York Times, Dec. 29, 1992]

HAVE THE HOUSE DEMOCRATS NO SHAME?

House Democrats have just awarded themselves five more votes. Unfazed by the crying need for Congressional reform, the Democratic caucus proposes to let non-voting delegates vote on the House floor. All five are, of course, Democrats.

Embarrassed by criticism of their greedy grab, the Democrats may try to water it down when the new Congress meets to adopt rules. But that's no answer. This maneuver is nothing but shameless political tyranny.

The Constitution says the House shall be composed of "Members chosen . . . by the People of the several States." Delegates aren't members, and the places they represent—the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, the Virgin Islands and American Samoa—aren't states.

Delegates are already permitted to vote in House committees; now the Democrats would let them vote in the Committee of the Whole. That's when the whole House sits as a "committee" and does most of its work on legislation.

The Republicans are justifiably furious, and want to take the issue to court. They have good ammunition. For example: Whatever happened to one person one vote? For the most part, each member represents about 520,000 constituents, but the Virgin Islands' delegate has only 95,000 while Puerto Rico's has 3.5 million.

In 1970, Representative Thomas Foley—now Speaker—said "it is very clear . . . that a constitutional amendment would be required to give [delegates] a vote in the Committee of the Whole, or in the full House." What changed his mind? Very likely the mounting pressure to make Washington D.C. a state. Failing to deliver on statehood, the Democrats offer a half-measure that gives the D.C. delegate more clout—and gives the other four delegates the same because it would be politically awkward to leave them out.

All of which adds up to an outrageous power play, as if an 80-plus majority weren't enough for absolute control. It is a distressing sign that the leadership hasn't the slightest clue that people are fed up with Washington's business as usual.

[From the Chicago Tribune, Dec. 30, 1992]

THE DEMOCRATS' GREEDY POWER GRAB

American voters trimmed the sails of the Democratic congressional leadership just a bit last month, reducing the party's House majority by 10 votes. Now the Democrats have concocted a little scheme to cut their losses in half.

The Democrats have given preliminary approval to rules changes that would give almost complete voting privileges to five congressional delegates who represent the District of Columbia and the territories of Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico. The five are Democrats.

This amounts to a blatant end-run around the Constitution, which allows full voting status only to the representatives of the states. The delegates are accorded floor privileges and allowed to vote in committees. But under the rules change, the provision for committee voting privileges would be extended to the Committee of the Whole, under which most substantive business of the entire House is conducted.

This is a power grab and a disservice to government. While it boosts Democratic congressional strength, it also damages the party's image and some of its long-term interests. It would be a setback for the laudable goal of establishing statehood for the District of Columbia through a constitutional amendment.

Republican opponents argue that the campaign for statehood has little to do with the right of D.C. residents to congressional representation and much to do with expanding the political muscle of the Democratic Party. When the Democrats stage such a messy show as this one on the delegates' voting rights, they lend credence to the GOP argument.

Some Democrats have begun to realize they're sitting on a public-relations disaster. They hope to soften the impact with an amendment that would limit the influence of the delegates' votes. If the delegates provided the difference in the outcome of any matter before the Committee of the Whole, the matter would be automatically sent to the House floor for another vote—in which the delegates couldn't participate.

That is a silly, convoluted and wholly unnecessary procedure. The Democrats' alternative plan, in effect, would subvert the Constitution to give the territorial delegates the power to vote, but guarantee that any time their votes really count . . . they won't be counted.

The Democrats can't finesse their way around this one. If they include the delegate voting rights next week when they take up the package of House rules that will govern the new Congress, they will seriously damage the cause of D.C. statehood and their own standing in the eyes of the public.

When they reconvene next week, the Democratic majority would be wise to drop the clumsy power grab and worry about the real business of the nation.

[From USA Today, Jan. 4, 1993]

WRONG WAY TO GRANT VOTING RIGHTS IN CONGRESS

Our view—The Democrats' first order of business is a power grab that short-circuits the Constitution.

House Democrats, always eager to grab more power, are expected to open Congress's new year Tuesday by making an end run around the Constitution.

After losing 10 seats in November, the Democrats have hatched a clever scheme to cut their losses.

The ploy calls for allowing five non-voting delegates—all Democrats—to vote in the Committee of the Whole, a meeting of the entire House where important bills can be debated and amended quickly, though not passed.

The Democrats claim noble intentions—new power for people in the District of Columbia and the territories of American Samoa, Guam, the U.S. Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico, which the delegates represent.

In fact, the Democrats are stretching the Constitution beyond its limits and inviting further partisan abuse.

The Constitution confines House membership to persons chosen by "the people of the various states." Delegates aren't members, and they don't represent states.

The delegates already have enough power—a right to vote in committees on which they serve. Most of them have little claim to greater clout.

The average House member represents about 519,000 people, but American Samoa has only 43,000 citizens, Guam 140,000 and the Virgin Islands 102,000.

And since residents of the territories pay no taxes to the U.S. Treasury, their voting status would mean representation without taxation, a curious and unjust twist on American history.

There are exceptions. District of Columbia residents pay $1.5 billion yearly in federal taxes. And Puerto Rico has 3.5 million people.

But if they want full voting rights, they should play by the Constitution's rules.

One way is to seek statehood. The other is to amend the Constitution to give delegates votes, a course once suggested by House Speaker Thomas Foley.

Neither is easily achieved. But rules exist for a reason—to prevent abuse. When the full House votes Tuesday, it should stick to the Constitution.

FODDER FOR THE TROUGH OF POWER

(By Bruce Fein)

On Dec. 8, 1992, the Democratic Caucus of the House of Representatives approved a proposed change in the House Rules that would empower delegates from the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and Guam and the resident commissioner from Puerto Rico to vote in the Committee of the Whole.

Next Jan. 5, the House will vote on the rule change. The measure is expected to pass via a Democrat steamroller, since all the delegates and the resident commissioner are Democrats. That shameless impending power grab, however, is blatantly unconstitutional, a conclusion conceded by House Speaker Thomas Foley, Washington Democrat, in 1970.

Article I, Section 1 of the Constitution entrusts all federal "legislative" power to the Senate and House of Representatives. Article 1, Section 2 confines membership in the House to persons chosen biannually "by the People of the several states." In other words, the legislative powers of the House may be exercised only by persons elected by voters in the various states, which excludes persons representing territories of the United States, the District of Columbia, the president of the United States, foreign governments, the Vatican, or otherwise.

Under House Rules, the Committee of the Whole manifestly exercises legislative power. For example, if it declines to report an amendment to the House, that decision cannot be overruled by the House. Additionally, amendments to amendments considered in the Committee of the Whole are not separately reported to the House. If that committee defeats a motion to rise and report a general appropriation bill after its reading for amendment, then a limitation amendment is permitted in the House. If such a motion is agreed to in the Committee of the Whole, the House cannot consider a limitation amendment.

The Committee of the Whole further votes on appeals of certain procedural rulings of the Chair that could change a bill yet would be shielded from review by the House.

In sum, voting in the Committee of the Whole epitomizes the exercise of legislative power because of its immediate and direct impact on the enactment of laws. That conclusion is reinforced by Article I, Section 6 of the Constitution—the so-called "speech or debate clause." It provides legal immunity for Members of Congress "for any speech or debate in either house." The U.S. Supreme Court declared in Doe vs. McMillan (1973) that the immunity "reaches any conduct within the sphere of legislative activity." That sphere, the high court had elaborated in Gravel vs. U.S. (1972), includes conduct that is "an integral part of the deliberative and communicative process by which Members participate in committee and House proceedings with respect to the consideration and passage of rejection of proposed legislation."

If House Members act within the sphere of legislative activity when voting in the Committee of the Whole, then the same must be true regarding any others who cast votes in that forum, including delegates and resident commissioners. Votes cast by the latter, however, should not be counted because they derogate from the Constitution's exclusive assignment of federal, legislative power to elected representatives from the several states. That conclusion was self-evident to Speaker Foley on Sept. 15, 1970, when the House was considering a proposal to confer the vote on the resident commissioner from Puerto Rico in standing committees. Mr. Foley categorically lectured: "Now it is very clear . . . that a constitutional amendment would be required to give the Resident Commissioner a vote in the Committee of the Whole or the full House."

Congress, of course, may delegate legislative power to the executive branch or independent agencies, but only if it articulates reasonably specific standards to confine the discretion of the recipients of the power. Thus, the Supreme Court has invalidated a delegation to the executive lacking standards for its exercise, Schecter Poultry vs. U.S. (1935), but has upheld delegations that provide policy, guidance for the recipients, e.g., U.S. vs. Rock Royal Co-operatives (1939). The delegation doctrine cannot save the impending House rule change, however, because it leaves unfettered the voting discretion of the delegates and resident commissioner.

The chief arguments favoring the constitutionality of the rule change are feeble. It is said that since the Constitution does not expressly limit the substance of committee rules, then the House is free of any restraints so long as the full House is required to approve any legislative measures. But Article 1, Sections 1 and 2 expressly confine the exercise of any legislative power, preliminary or final, to members of Congress. There are no exceptions. Further, the argument exalts form over substance. There is no gainsaying that votes in the Committee of the Whole and other committees directly affect the substance of legislation. Indeed, that is the reason why that opportunity to vote is craved by the delegates and resident commissioner.

Manipulating committee voting rights to circumvent the Constitution's exclusive assignment of legislative power to Representatives is admittedly clever. But as the Supreme Court taught in Terry vs. Adams (1953), sophisticated evasions of the Constitution are as void as the simpleminded. The high court held unconstitutional the Texas Jaybird Democratic Association's exclusion of blacks from its primaries. Although the Association was simply a private organization with no recognized status under state law, its primaries, de facto, dictated the general election victor. The Association was, in effect, the State, the court reasoned, and thus was equally restrained by the 15th Amendment.

To accept the sweeping constitutional arguments of the rule's proponents would concede the power of a House majority to emasculate the legislative power of Representatives. The arguments place no limits on the number of non-Members who could vote in the Committee of the Whole under a House rule. That number, for instance, might reach 1,000. Additionally, the arguments would authorize a rule permitting the Speaker to endow family members and relatives, cronies, campaign contributors and representatives of foreign governments or political parties with committee voting rights. They would also permit a rule prohibiting a floor vote on a House bill that would override a District of Columbia city ordinance without the consent of the District of Columbia delegate. There is no constitutional text or purpose, however, that would justify such vast dilutions of the legislative powers of the elected Representatives of the people of the several states.

At present, House rules permit delegates and the resident commissioner to vote in standing committees, which exercise legislative power similar to that of the Committee of the Whole. Those voting privileges are thus unconstitutional, and should be challenged in federal court along with the impending Jan. 5 rule change regarding the Committee of the Whole. To avoid any speech or debate clause difficulties, the lawsuit should seek an injunction only against delegates and the resident commissioner, who are excluded from the protection of the clause.

Finley Peter Dunne would have sardonically quipped about this shameless abuse of power by House Democrats, "What's the Constitution between friends?"

POWER GRAB IN THE HOUSE

(By George F. Will)

No wide-awake American will be startled by redundant evidence that power corrupts. Still, there is something notably brassy about what Speaker Tom Foley and his flock of lock-step House Democrats—another herd of independent minds—have decided to do regarding the five delegates to the House of Representatives from Guam, American Samoa, the U.S. Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico and the District of Columbia.

Most Americans have better things to do than monitor decisions of the House Democratic caucus, so most Americans do not know that their representation in the House is soon to be diluted. Democrats have decided to use their control of the House to give those five delegates—all Democrats, of course—the right to vote on the floor when the House is functioning as a "Committee of the Whole," in which mode most significant decisions are taken.

Pending an appeal to the Supreme Court, the Constitution is a mere parchment barrier to such majoritarian abuse. Article I, Section Two uses the word "state" seven times in referring to the only entity from which members of the House may be chosen. But now House Democrats have decided they can use control of House rules to confer virtually full voting privileges on those five delegates.

Welcome to the 1990s, a "Decade of Greed" in the Democrats' style. There is greed for power as well as money, and evidently an 82-seat advantage in the House is not enough for the Democrats.

Roll Call is the feisty newspaper that covers Congress and can be called, somewhat oxymoronically, the conscience of Capitol Hill. It knows abuse of power when it sees it and sees it in the Democrats' "outrageous behavior" and "power grab" regarding the delegates.

Roll Call notes that in November Democrats lost 10 House seats but in December decided to seize half that number of new seats without consulting any voters—other than themselves, in their caucus. Henceforth, in the Committee of the Whole—which as Roll Call rightly says "is where the important stuff gets done, except the final passage of a bill"—the 47,000 people of American Samoa, who do not pay income taxes, will have as much say as 800,000 Montanans about raising taxes and spending the revenues. Someone should explain to Samoans—and Democrats—the principle "No representation without taxation." The average congressional district has more than 500,000 residents. The U.S. Virgin Islands have 102,000; Guam has 133,000. Democrats suddenly have a, well, relaxed attitude about the hitherto sacred "one man, one vote" rule.

Roll Call, unable to contain its sarcasm (and unable to stop giving Democrats ideas for more mischief), says Puerto Rico, with 3.5 million residents and just one delegate, is getting gypped: "If Democrats became truly creative, they could divide Puerto Rico up into seven delegate districts, giving each a vote," or they could give a delegate to each of the three U.S. Virgin Islands, or to the four quadrants of the District of Columbia.

The Congressional Research Service was asked by its employers to examine the constitutionality of the sort of decision the Democratic caucus has vowed to take when Congress convenes. The CRS came up with a remarkably mushy analysis affirming the propriety of its employers' desire. CRS does so in language that would be laughable were the Constitution not being trashed. The analysis concludes with this tortured locution:

"* * *[A]llowing a delegate to vote in the Committee of the Whole is apparently consistent with present Congressional interpretation of its constitutional authority."

That is: Doing what the Democratic majority is determined to do is "apparently" compatible with what the Democratic majority says it has authority to do.

For perspective on the arrogance and tendentiousness of today's rulers of Congress, consider a change from 22 years ago.

On Sept. 15, 1970, the House was debating a change in its rules that would allow the resident commissioner to the United States from Puerto Rico to serve on standing committees "in the same manner as Members of the House and shall possess in such committees the same powers and privileges as the other Members." A young congressman then in his third term said he supported that measure, even though "we clearly cannot give him a vote in the House."

Committee service, said this congressman, is one thing, and a much lesser thing, than voting on the House floor. Committees are mere creatures of the House, not of the Constitution, and "can be extinguished at will and created at will", without even the concurrence of the Senate.

Furthermore, said this congressman, service on committees involves only "preliminary advisory votes." Therefore such service does not involve a constitutional issue, as would votes cast in the Committee of the Whole or the full House. And, said this same congressman, "It is very clear, as the resident commissioner has said, that a constitutional amendment would be required to give the resident commissioner a vote in the Committee of the Whole of the full House."

Thus spoke Tom Foley, before unbridled power made him more flexible and casual about his convictions concerning the Constitution.

[From the Washington Post, Dec. 20, 1992]

FOLEY ON A D.C. TIGHTROPE

(By David S. Broder)

Early next month when Congress reconvenes, if all goes according to plan, the Democrats who control the House of Representatives will vote themselves five extra votes on the floor of the House. They will do that by amending the rule to allow the delegates from the District of Columbia, American Samoa, Guam and the Virgin Islands and the resident commissioner from Puerto Rico, all of whom happen to be Democrats, to vote for the first time when the House is sitting as "the committee of the whole."

Most of the time the House is in session it is sitting as "the committee of the whole." Custom and convenience dictate that's where virtually all debate and amending of legislation take place. So this proposal would give the five delegates parity with the 435 members elected from the states on all but the final votes on each piece of legislation.

Naturally, the Republicans are screaming foul and claiming that the Democrats are attempting a power play that would, at a stroke, wipe out half the 10-seat gain the GOP scored in last month's House elections. They are making enough of a racket that Speaker of the House Thomas S. Foley (D-Wash.) is showing some nervousness about attempting to ram the plan through on opening day. "The issue will be revisited," his spokesman, Jeffrey Biggs, told me when I asked about Foley's reaction to a letter of protest he had received from Minority Leader Robert H. Michel (R-Ill.).

For those of us on the sidelines, without a partisan horse to ride, the issue is intriguing both substantively and politically. It sheds light on a largely unexamined corner of the Constitution and reveals much about the tensions on Capitol Hill awaiting President-elect Clinton and his administration.

The move to get floor votes for the delegates began with Eleanor Holmes Norton, the highly capable lawyer who represents the District of Columbia in Congress. For many years, the District's and the territories' delegates have been allowed to vote in House committees, where legislation is shaped before being sent to the floor, in a legal memo last September, Norton argued that law and equity supported extending the same privilege to "the committee of the whole," i.e., the House floor. She argued that was especially true for the District, whose citizens, she noted, now "are subject to every obligation of citizenship—most notably federal taxation—but remain barred from sending voting representatives to Congress."

Foley and the other House Democratic leaders agreed to Norton's plea for the District and decided that the four territories should be given the same status. The decision was ratified early this month in the House Democratic caucus—a move which brought the Republicans up in protest.

Norton told me in an interview the other day that "Republicans are making it a political issue when there is no legal or constitutional issue." But it is not quite that simple. Her brief supports the case for floor voting by delegates, but several authorities are not convinced.

A Congressional Research Service memo last November found that such a rules change might controvert an 1817 statute providing territorial delegates with "the right of debating but not of voting." As to the Constitution, the same memo said that "although delegates have had the authority to participate in the legislative process for years, no court appears to have addressed the question as to the constitutional implications of these practices."

When House parliamentarian William Holmes Brown was asked for his opinion last October, he said. "The proposal has been discussed before, and several basic arguments against giving delegates this authority remain persuasive to me."

Somewhat to Foley's embarrassment, the research on legal precedents turned up this comment from him during the 1970 debate on letting Puerto Rico's resident commissioner vote in House committees: "Now it is very clear, as the resident commissioner has said, that a constitutional amendment would be required to give the resident commissioner a vote in the committee of the whole or the full House."

Asked about the comment this week, Foley's spokesman Biggs said simply; "He's changed his mind."

Republicans make other arguments. The one-man-one-vote principle is basic to the apportionment of House seats, they note. But while the average member of the House represents 519,235 people, American Samoa's delegate has only 32,395 constituents, Virgin Islands' 95,214, and Guam's 105,816. Residents of those territories and Puerto Rico pay taxes into territorial treasuries, but not to the U.S. Treasury.

With Clinton hoping for a smooth start next month and even some bi-partisan support for his key economic measures, Foley is not eager for a knockdown fight with the Republicans about this issue. He knows some of his own moderate and conservative Democrats have qualms about the move. But he is under pressure from Norton and other liberals not to back down.

The search is on for a compromise but, as with much bigger issues that will come along after Clinton's Inaugural the speaker is walking a tightrope.

NORTON PROPOSAL UNDER FIRE

(By Kent Jenkins, Jr.)

House Democrats are having second thoughts about a proposal to give Del. Eleanor Holmes Norton (D–D.C.) a vote on the House floor, and several said yesterday that the plan could face a last-minute challenge when Congress convenes next week.

Several senior Democrats said opposition to the proposal has been brewing since it was overwhelmingly approved by the House's Democratic majority three weeks ago, adding that some members have expressed a desire to overturn the decision.

The plan is expected to be the subject of additional debate when Congress begins its session next Tuesday because some Democrats have begun to question whether it would unconstitutionally elevate the status of people who are not full-fledged representatives.

"This is very controversial with some members," said Rep. Charles W. Stenholm (D–Tex.), who heads the House's Conservative Democratic Forum. "It was a sleeper issue when it came through, and nobody was focusing on it. There's been a lot of concern since it was passed * * *. It could be explosive."

Jeffrey Biggs, press secretary to House Speaker Thomas S. Foley (Wash.), said that House Democrats "are going to revisit" the issue before Congress convenes and that "some members of the caucus may have political concerns" about it, Norton conceded that the plan "is not a done deal."

The proposal would give the District's clout on Capitol Hill a historic boost by granting its delegate a vote on the House floor for the first time. The plan also would give floor votes to the resident commissioner from Puerto Rico and to delegates from Guam, American Samoa and the Virgin Islands.

The delegates and the resident commissioner have been allowed to vote only in committee. The Constitution restricts full House membership to representatives of the states.

But Norton put forward a proposal that would allow the delegates to vote on virtually all substantive matters by exploiting an arcane parliamentary device called the "committee of the whole." Norton, a former law professor, argued that if the delegates could vote in smaller committees, they could vote in the most important committee as well.

The House does most of its important business while sitting as the committee of the whole and rarely alters legislation when it subsequently votes on final passage.

All the delegates and the resident commissioner are Democrats, and House Republicans have expressed strong opposition to Norton's idea.

The GOP picked up 10 House seats in the November election. But giving five additional Democrats a vote on the House floor would cut into that gain.

Some House members also have argued that allowing the delegates to vote on virtually all important matters violates the Constitution by making the delegates the equivalent of full House members.

To address those constitutional concerns, Democrats plan to make one change that would limit the power conferred on Norton and the other four. under the amendment, if those five cast decisive votes on any matter in the committee of the whole, their votes, in effect, would not count. Norton supports the change, because it probably would apply to no more than one or two votes a year.

Several House members are considering amendments that would weaken the proposal further. Rep. David E. Skaggs (D–Colo.) said he might introduce a plan that would give Norton, but not the other four, a vote on the House floor.

Another proposal being discussed by the House leadership would give Republicans a better chance to kill the idea altogether.

Norton's plan is part of a package of House rules approved by the Democratic majority, and all Democrats customarily vote for the entire package.But Rep. Steny H. Hoyer (D–Md.), chairman of the House Democratic Caucus, said House leaders have considered separating the floor-vote idea from the package because it is so controversial.

If Norton's plan goes before the full House separately, some Democrats could join with Republicans to defeat it. Hoyer said the House leaders have not decided how to handle the issue.

Norton said yesterday that although opposition to her proposal remains, she is still confident it will be approved. "I think we have made our case, and in the end we will prevail," Norton said.

ANALYSIS OF HOUSE RULES CHANGES FOR 103D CONGRESS PROPOSED BY THE DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS

(By Congressman Gerald B. Solomon)

INTRODUCTION

Tomorrow, January 5, 1993, the House will take-up H. Res. 5, adopting the Rules of the House for the 103rd Congress. These rules changes were reported from the Democratic Caucus at its organizational meetings in early December. The resolution will be considered under the hour-rule with no amendments unless the previous question is defeated—in which case the Republican Leader will offer a 48-point Republican substitute. Below is a summary and critique the amendments proposed by the Democrats in the order in which they will likely be listed in H. Res. 5 (a further amendment relating to delegate voting may be adopted at the Tuesday morning Democratic Caucus).

(1) Abolish Non-Record, Teller Votes—Teller votes, whereby, on the demand of one-fifth of a quorum in the House or Committee of the Whole, Members file down the aisle to be counted in the affirmative or negative, would be eliminated. (Rule I, clause 5(a))

Comments—Teller votes may only be demanded after a division vote is taken. They are not duplicative in that Members are advised by the bell system that a teller vote is taking place and therefore a larger number are likely to vote by teller than by division. Their remaining value is that they do allow for a more accurate and representative non-record than a division vote. This can be important in situation in which agreement has been struck that no further record votes will be called on a particular day or matter.

(2) Create an Office of General Counsel—The Office of General Counsel would be established in the House under the direction of the Speaker, in consultation with the bipartisan Legal Advisory Group, for the purpose of providing legal assistance and representation for the House on a nonpartisan basis. (Rule I, clause 11)

Comments—This amendment codifies the provisions of H. Res. 423, 102nd Congress, the House Administrative Reform Resolution, which converted the office of General Counsel to the Clerk to that of House General Counsel, but changes the placement of the Office from being under the House Administration Committee to being under the direction of the Speaker. It does not go as far as the Republican alternative which, among other things, called for appointment upon the recommendation of the majority and minority leaders, and for House approval of any intervention in legal proceedings not agreed to unanimously by the bipartisan Legal Advisory Group.

(3) Permit the Speaker to Declare Recesses—The Speaker would be authorized to declare recesses of the House at any point during a legislative day if no question is pending. (Rule I, clause 12)

Comments—The Speaker may already recognize a Member to offer a motion to grant the Speaker this right, but such motions are subject to a vote of the House. The underscored language above has been added since the provision was adopted by the Caucus to clarify that this recess authority may not be used to delay consideration of pending business.

(4) Question of Privilege Resolutions—The Speaker would be given authority to postpone for up to two days consideration of certain "question of privilege" resolutions affecting the rights of the House collectively—its safety, dignity and integrity of its proceedings. Exceptions to this two-day delay would include (a) resolutions offered by the majority or minority leaders; (b) resolutions reported by committees; (c) "blue slip" resolutions relating to the right of the House to originate revenue bills; or (d) questions of personal privilege raised by Members. Debate time on resolutions would be divided between the proponent and the majority or minority leader, or their designee, as determined by the Speaker.

Comments—House Rule IX relating to "questions of privilege" dates back to 1880, but such questions were recognized as privileged from the First Congress and have their origin in British parliamentary law. They are designed to protect the dignity and integrity of the House and its Members. To permit the Speaker to delay consideration of such questions is to deny the House an opportunity to immediately address a wrong that has been done to its reputation or the integrity of its proceedings. While the authority to delay consideration of certain question of privilege resolutions is justified on grounds of giving the House time to make an informed judgment (and avoid embarrassing surprises), it can also obviously be used by the majority to "whip" votes in opposition or devise alternative strategies or resolutions to preempt the original question.

Question of privilege have been used in recent years both to expose and force the investigation of scandals which have undermined public confidence in the House. Delays in considering such questions can only further contribute to public cynicism since they will be perceived as attempts to cover-up, obstruct or politicize the issue. Whereas now the debate time is controlled entirely by the proponent, the new rule would divide it between the proponent and the majority or minority leader (or their designees), as determined by the Speaker. While this may seem fair, by not allowing half the time to be allocated to an opponent, the Speaker could recognize a majority leader designee to control the other half of the time on the majority leader's resolution, i.e., the entire hour could be controlled by proponents.

(5) Name Change of Interior Committee—The name of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs would be changed to the Committee on Natural Resources. (Rule X, clause 1(l))

Comments—The change has been proposed to more accurately reflect the nature of the committee's jurisdiction.

(6) Update Obsolete Names of Agencies—In the rule relating to the jurisdiction of the Science Committee, the name of the Bureau of Standards would be changed to the National Institutes of Standards and Technology, and the name of the National Aeronautics and Space Council would changed to the National Space Council. (Rule X, clause 1(r))

Comments—These changes simply reflect statutory changes in the names of these two entities.

(7) Status of Votes in Bipartisan HAC Subcommittee—The Speaker, majority and minority leaders, and chairman and ranking minority member of the House Administration Committee would be informed of any matter in the bipartisan Subcommittee on Administrative Oversight of House Administration that could not be resolved by virtue of a tie vote. (Rule X, clause 3(j)(3))

Comments—H. Res. 423, 102nd Congress, the House Administrative Reform Resolution, established a bipartisan Subcommittee on Administrative Oversight in the Rules of the House and provided that any matter that cannot be resolved by virtue of a tie vote would be forwarded to the full committee for consideration. This amendment, adopted at the urging of the Ranking Republican on the House Administration Committee, would reflect the normal House procedure that such a matter would be considered defeated, while retaining the notification requirement to the House majority and minority leaders and the House Administration Committee's chairman and ranking minority member.

(8) Changing Members of Select and Conference Committees—The Speaker would be authorized to add or remove members from select and conference committees without the unanimous consent of the House as is now required for such changes. (Rule X, clause 6(f))

Comments—This proposal is a throwback to the days of "Czar Speaker" when the Speaker had authority to appoint and remove members from all committees for any reason without the approval of the House. The authority was often used to punish or reward Members according to the whims of the Speaker and could be used in that manner again if the Speaker were allowed to exercise such arbitrary authority. Even if it were not abused in this way, the authority would open the Speaker to constant pressures to appoint additional conferees to protect committees' turf—resulting in even larger and more unmanageable conferences.

(9) Delegates on Conference Committees—The Speaker would be authorized to appoint delegates to conference committees on legislation not reported from the committees on which they sit. (Rule X, clause 6(h)

Comments—Delegates may already be appointed to conferences on which their committees are involved. While the purpose of this proposal is to give them the same right as other Members to be conferees for other reasons, the fact that delegates currently are not counted when determining committee party ratios means that the votes of Members of the opposite party will only be further diluted, resulting in inequitable and unrepresentative committees.

(10) Striking Permanent Authorization for Select Committee on Aging—The "permanent Select Committee on Aging" would be removed from the standing rules of the House. (Rule X, clause 6(i))

Comments—The effect of this rules change is to put the select committee on Aging on the same footing as other non-legislative select committees, requiring separate authorization by the House in each Congress. [Note: The Republican substitute would abolish all non-legislative select committees, including Aging.]

(11) Committee Meetings During House Debate on Amendments—The current rule prohibiting committees to sit while the House is considering amendments under the five-minute rule except by consent of the House would be abolished. (Rule XI, clause 2(i)(1))

Comments—The need for this rule is occasioned by the three-day work weeks and the few windows committees have to meet and conduct business. The purpose of the existing rule is to encourage Member participation in and attention to important House debates on amendments. If committees are allowed to sit during the House amendment process, the deliberative function of the House will be further eroded and Members will be even less likely than at present to be informed on the floor amendments they are asked to vote on. The answer to the current problem is to move to more five-day work weeks so that committees have more time to do their work.

(12) "Rolling" Committee Quorums—It is proposed that the current House requirement that a committee majority quorum actually be present (by precedent meaning, at the same time) when a measure or matter is ordered reported be changed so that a point of order could not be raised on the floor unless it is "timely made" in committee. Committee records showing that a majority responded on a roll call is sufficient proof of the presence of a quorum, regardless of how many were present at any one time. There is no comparable standard that committee records show the presence of a quorum at the time of a voice vote. (Rule XI, clause 2(1)(2)(A))

Comments—While some committees may have a difficulty achieving and keeping a quorum, it is nevertheless a fundamental principle of Parliamentary Law in the House, dating back to Jefferson's Manual, that a committee "can only act when together." To permit a rolling quorum defeats the purpose of collective deliberation and decision-making. Under this proposal, the chair could technically leave the vote open for days for Members to drop by and record their votes with the Clerk, simply by not adjourning a meeting (providing, of course, there is no intervening business). This is even worse than a one-third quorum which is now permitted for committee markup (voting on amendments): it is a quorum of one-by-one-by-one-by-one * * *.

In the case of a voice vote to report, the new rule is even more outrageous. While the rule would still require a majority quorum to report, it could not be enforced in the House unless the point of order is made at the time of the voice vote. This means that as few as one Member (presumably the chairman) could order a bill reported if no one else is present to make a point of order that a quorum is not present—in effect a one-person quorum. And, in the case of a division vote, even if the division shows the lack of a quorum, a point of order would not lie on the floor against the measure unless first made in committee.

(13) Permitting Delegates & Resident Commissioner to Vote in the Committee of the Whole—The Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico and the Delegates from the District of Columbia, Guam, the Virgin Islands and American Samoa shall be elected to serve on standing committees in the same manner as Members of the House and shall possess in such committees the same powers and privileges as the other Members; and shall possess the same powers and privileges in a Committee of the Whole as other Members of the House. (Rule XII, clauses 1 & 2))

Comments.—Under Rule XXIII, clause 3, all bills involving a tax or charge on the people, authorizing or appropriating money or property, releasing any liability to the U.S. of money or property, or referring any claim to the Court of Claims, shall first be considered in a Committee of the Whole which now consists of all House Members. Under clause 2(a) of the same rule, "A quorum of a Committee of the Whole shall consist of one hundred Members." The Resident Commissioner and four delegates to the Congress are not considered Members of the House and are currently not permitted to vote in the House or in the Committee of the Whole, though they may participate in debates and make any motion a Member can make (Except a motion to reconsider), and raise points of order. They may also be members of House committees with full voting rights. However, they are currently prohibited by law from voting in the House (Revised Statutes, sec. 1862; 2 Hinds' §1290), and by interpretive extension, in a Committee of the Whole House.

Permitting the RC and delegates to vote in the Committee of the Whole raises serious practical, political and constitutional problems. First and foremost is the nature of the Committee of the Whole under current practice and the effect of allowing non-Members to vote in the Committee of the Whole.

The two most important matters to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union are tax and appropriations bills. Only the District of Columbia, of the five, pays U.S. taxes. And yet, the non-Members could provide the margin of difference in defeating an amendment affecting revenues or the expenditure thereof. Under current rules, amendments defeated in the Committee of the Whole may not be reconsidered by the House when a bill is reported back from the Committee of the Whole. It is thus conceivable that non-Members representing non-taxpaying territories could be the deciding factor as to whether a tax is raised or reduced on American taxpayers. Their votes could in effect nullify the votes of a majority of House Members representing a majority of the American population.

While the claim is make that such delegates shall possess the same rights as Members in the Committee of the Whole, the fact that three of the five represent populations considerably less than that of Members' districts means their votes are disproportionately weighted over that of House Members.

Non-voting delegates could also provide the difference between whether a limitation amendment can be considered to an appropriations bill since a House majority can ordinarily defeat the motion that the Committee of the Whole rise in order to consider such an amendment. By giving non-Members the right to vote on such matters, the will of a House majority on limiting spending could thus be thwarted by a few non-Members.

The fact that the House is increasingly considering important measures under restrictive amendment rules means that votes in the Committee of the Whole are all the more critical and likely to be binding on the House—especially on king-of-the-hill amendment procedures or on bills on which only one substitute is allowed.

Even if such a ruling is appealed, delegates may provide the deciding vote as to whether the chair's ruling is upheld or overruled.

Finally, although the non-Members supposedly possess the same powers and privileges as House Members in the Committee of the Whole, the fact that the rules have not been changed to include delegates in the 25-Member threshold requirement for recorded votes, or the 100-Member quorum requirement, seriously confuses things. [Note: the Democratic Caucus may adopt on Tuesday a new paragraph (14) to H. Res. 5 permitting the House to immediately reconsider the vote on any amendment which is rejected in the Committee of the Whole by five or fewer votes, where the delegates's votes would make the difference between adoption and rejection of an amendment.]

(14) Five-minute vote on Special Rules—This amendment would allow the Speaker to reduce to five-minutes the vote on an order of business resolution (special rule) after the previous question has been ordered by roll call vote. (Rule XV, clause 5)

Comments—This tracks the current rules allowing a reduction in time on certain other roll call votes: on amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole, and on passage of bills, resolutions or conference reports after the motion to recommit, if there is no intervening business.

(15) CBO Cost Estimates in Bills—The current requirements that a CBO cost estimate be included in the text of any bill which increases or decreases taxes or direct spending would be abolished. (Rule XXI, clause 8)

Comments—Republicans strongly objected to this rule when it was instituted at the beginning of the 102nd Congress on grounds that it was both impractical and irrelevant—only OMB scoring is relevant for sequestration purposes. Now that the Democrats have a President of their own, they apparently do not object to OMB scoring. The requirement that CBO cost estimates be included in the reports on bills would not be altered.

(16) Permitting Resident Commissioner & Delegates to Chair Committee of the Whole—The rule relating to the "Committee of the Whole" would be amended to clarify that the Speaker may appoint the Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico or a delegate to chair the Committee of the Whole. (Rule XXIII, clause 1(a))

Comments—Non-Member chairing of the Committee of the Whole means that a non-Member of the House as presiding officer could issue critical rulings on such things as the germaneness of amendments, thereby possibly precluding the Committee and the House from even considering certain amendments if they are ruled out of order. Moreover, such rulings constitute binding precedents on the House is similar situation should arise in the House. While it is true that rulings of the Chair may be appealed in the Committee of the Whole, the non-Members could make the difference between upholding or overruling the Chair's decision, and this would not be subject to reconsideration by the House.

(17) Notice and Scheduling of Motions to Instruct Conferees—Members would be required to give at least one legislative day's notice of motions to discharge and replace conferees or to instruct them after they have been appointed for 20 or more calendar days. (Rule XXVIII, clause 1(c))

Comments—Current House rules require one-day's notice on a motion to instruct conferees, but not on motions to discharge and replace them (which could also involve a motion to instruct if the discharge motion is adopted). The purpose of both notice requirements is to prevent surprises and give the majority time to work their Members to vote against such motions when offered by the minority. It should be noted that the majority is not subject to similar one-day notice requirements with respect to privileged motions it may offer, such as motions to suspend the rules and pass bills. Even when it does notice suspension bills, it is not obligated to give Members advance copies of amendments that may be offered when the suspension bill is called up. Advance notification should be a two-way street if it is intended for the information of the House and not just for narrow partisan purposes.

(18) Legislative Committees' Preferential Motion to Insist—The current House rule relating to the disposition of Senate amendments reported in disagreement between the two Houses would be amended with respect to amendments changing existing law reported in disagreement to general appropriations bills to allow a preferential motion by the chairman of the relevant authorizing committee to insist on disagreement, if the Appropriations manager initially offers a different motion. Debate time would be equally divided between the authorizing chairman and the Appropriations Committee manager of the original motion. (Rule XXVIII, clause 2(b))

Comments—Under regular procedure, once the two Houses have reached the stage of disagreement, the most preferential motion is to move towards agreement (i.e., to concur or concur with an amendment) rather than to insist on disagreement. This proposal would reverse that priority of motions for the purpose of allowing authorizing chairman to have precedence for insisting on disagreement when the amendment reported is of a legislative nature and the manager for the Appropriations Committee does not offer a motion to insist on disagreement with the Senate. The effect of adopting the motion to insist on disagreement is to send the matter back to the Senate without any suggested compromise (as opposed to a motion to recede from disagreement and concur with an amendment). The other unusual procedure introduced with this change is the division of time between two majority members as opposed to between the majority and minority parties as with other motions to dispose of Senate amendment reported in disagreement. The minority is completely shut out of the debate on this new preferential motion unless the majority proponent or opponent yield some time to the minority as a matter of courtesy.

(19) Reading of Papers—The current House rule prohibiting Members from reading from written materials except by vote of the House if objection is raised would be abolished except with respect to the use of exhibits. (Rule XXX)

Comments—Rule XXX, prohibiting the reading from papers (except a paper to be voted on), was originally adopted in 1794. While objection is usually not raised against a Member's reading from a paper for the information of the House, the rule was instituted as a check against possible abuse. Jefferson explains in his Manual (sec. xxxii) the need for a rule against an unlimited right to read from papers: "The delay and interruption which this might be made to produce evince the impossibility of the existence of such a right." Moreover, since the current prohibition extends to Members reading from written speeches. Again, quoting from Jefferson's Manual," A Member has not a right even to read his own speech, committed to writing, without leave. This also is to prevent an abuses of time, and therefore is not refused but where that is intended." Moreover, the effect of such a prohibition is to encourage more genuine debate and deliberation in the House as opposed to set speeches in the House in which Members talk past each other than than engaging in a meaningful discussion of the points raised by others.

(20) Abolishing Obsolete Rule on Franking—The current rule permitting franked-mass mailings into a Member's prospective new district would be abolished and would be replaced by a rule confining such mailings to a Member's current district. (Rule XLVI, clause 4)

Comments—This change brings the House rule into conformity with a statutory provision enacted in the 102nd Congress as part of the Legislative Branch Appropriations Act of 1991. [Note: The Republican substitute contains an identical provision.]

(21) House Fair Employment Practices—Various technical changes are proposed to House Rule LI, "Employment Practices." These include allowing Members to discriminate against employees based on political affiliation (as committees may now do); by making certain changes in the time frames under the complaint, mediation and decision stages of the resolution process; and by permitting the Office of Fair Employment Practices to issue written requests for information, documents and the attendance of witnesses, enforceable through the ethics committee. (Rule LI)

Comments—It is not made clear how enforcement of requests for information or for witness testimony would be enforced. However, in explanatory material, it is pointed out that the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct is in a position to deal with any violations of House Rules, and that a refusal to comply with such a request would constitute such a violation. Therefore, the Standards Committee could presumably order a compliance with the request and/or recommend to the House that the Member be punished by the House.

A MANDATE FOR CHANGE IN THE PEOPLE'S HOUSE

(Republican Conference House Rules Amendments, 103rd Congress)

"con•gress—1. a coming together;"—Webster's New World Dictionary.

INTRODUCTION

The U.S. Congress has become a contradiction in term: instead of epitomizing "a coming together," in recent years it has increasingly evinced a falling apart—an institutional breakdown that has produced the gridlock of democracy.

While it may be convenient to lay all the blame on the condition of divided government which existed for 20 of the last 24 years, such an analysis ignores the more endemic, structural deterioration that has occurred within the Congress and which will not be magically cured by this year's ascendancy of a Democrat to the White House. If anything, unified party control of the Executive and Legislative Branches could actually weaken Congress further.

The Democrats' control of the House of Representatives for 58 of the last 62 years has produced a bloated, muscle-bound bureaucracy characterized by a multiplicity of semi-autonomous subcommittees, multitudes of staff, a muddle of tangled jurisdictional lines, and a multiplication of mud-fights over turf.

Democratic leadership efforts to produce legislative results out of this bureaucratic chaos by relying on ad hoc task forces and restrictive amendment procedures have not only resulted in ill-conceived and unrepresentative legislation but have further undermined deliberative democracy. Key decisions have been moved from the sum-filled committee rooms and Chamber of the People's House to the smoke-filled back-rooms of partisan power-brokers.

All this has not been lost on the American people. According to Gallup Surveys, public approval of the way Congress was handling its job plummeted to an all-time low of 18% in 1992. Public disgust with Congress manifested itself in a turn-over of one-fourth of the House membership and the overwhelming adoption of term limitation proposals in all 14 States in which it appeared on the ballot. While 93% of House incumbents in the general election were reelected, a record number squeaked through by marginal votes.

If there was one message that came through loud and clear from the 1992 election results, it was a public demand for change. And that demand will not be satisfied by a change in the White House alone. If the Democratic leadership continues to ignore and resist the need and public demand for change in the Congress, it will do so at its own peril, and to the further imperilment of democracy.

For these reasons, the House Republican Conference again commits itself to nothing less than a comprehensive overhaul of the Congress. We enthusiastically accept the challenge the American people have laid at our doorstep by offering our reform proposals as "A Mandate for Change in the People's House."

THE COMMITTEE SYSTEM

In 1885, Woodrow Wilson observed in his treatise, Congressional Government, that, "Congress in session is Congress on public exhibition, whilst Congress in its committee rooms is Congress at work."

The congressional committee system is indeed the legislative workshop of the institution where policy options are debated, developed, and translated into legislative language. And yet, in recent years that committee system has broken down into a fragmented system of subcommittee government which has proven to be incapable of developing coherent, cohesive, or consensus-producing legislation.

The proliferation of subcommittees, from 136 in 1972 to 158 in 1992, and the attendant committee staff, from 889 to 2,295 over the same period, have made it nearly impossible for committees to conscientiously carry out their responsibilities. Members are spread too thinly with multiple committee and subcommittee assignments to do any of them justice. To get around this, committees and subcommittees relay on one-third quorum rules and proxy voting. This only contributes to producing legislation that is unrepresentative and for which there is little accountability.

Compounding this problem is the practice instituted in 1975 of referring the same bills to more than one committee. This "reform" was adopted at the same time the House rejected a companion reform to realign committee jurisdictions along more functional and rational lines. The result has been the worst of all worlds—a committee system in which an inordinate amount of time is spent in duplicative hearings, markups, reports, and turf battles.

It should therefore not seem surprising that despite the increase in subcommittees and staff over the last two decades, committee output has declined from over 1,000 reported bills in the 92nd Congress (1971–72) to 696 reported bills in the 102nd Congress (1991–92). While the number of public laws enacted is roughly the same for the two Congresses, 607 vs. 590, when one subtracts commemorative legislation, the number of substantive laws has declined dramatically, from 561 to 399. While some of this can be explained by the increase in omnibus bills, it is also due in large part to the reprocessing of the same bills by various committees. Some 12 House committees, for instance, were involved in the energy bill in the 102nd Congress.

Further contributing to the decline of the committee system has been the large amount of time spent by Congress on budget and appropriations matters. Authorizing committees have consequently fallen victims to "budgetary squeeze-out"— sandwiched in time between the adoption of the budget resolutions and the consideration of appropriations bills. While authorizing committees could and should report more bills earlier in a session, they have a tendency to delay reporting. It is little wonder then that fewer and fewer authorizations are even considered, let alone enacted, before their appropriations are acted on. According to a CBO report, in fiscal years 1991 and 1992, 122 unauthorized laws were funded to the tune of $71.4 billion.

The problem of unauthorized and legislative provisions appearing in appropriations bills, contrary to House Rules requirements, has been increasing in recent years, and increasingly the Rules Committee has protected these against points of order. Much of this illegitimate activity in the appropriations process has led to heated floor battles between authorizing chairmen and their Appropriations counterparts.

Further contributing to the growing obsolescence of authorizing committees has been the attempts by the leadership to circumvent the committees to devise legislative compromises. This is done through the creation of ad hoc legislative task forces, crafting entire substitutes for committee bills and making these original text in special rules, and often dictating that certain amendments be self-executed into bills on the floor.

THE FLOOR SITUATION

If, as Wilson observed, Congress in session is Congress on public exhibition, today it is an exhibition of the extent to which deliberative democracy has declined and the people's Representatives have been disenfranchised.

Whereas 14 years ago, in the 97th Congress, only 15% of the bills coming through the Rules Committee were considered under a restrictive amendment process, in the most recent 102nd Congress, the number of restrictive rules comprised 66% of all rules.

The main reason given for such "structured" rules is "legislative efficiency" and "time management." But it is just as true, when one considers which amendments are allowed and which are not, that it is also done for purposes of political expediency and legislative outcome management and predictability.

Another way outcomes are managed is by bringing bills up under a "suspension of the rules" where no amendments are allowed. Whereas in the 95th Congress, 38% of all measures passed were considered under suspension, in the 102nd Congress, 52% of all bills passed were passed under suspension.

If time management were truly important to the leadership, it would make greater efforts to establish a legislative agenda and timetable for major legislation at the beginning of each session and hold committees to it. More bills would be considered during the first half of the year instead of attempting to process all major legislation in the final month or two of a session. It is not unusual anymore for the House to pass major bills in the final weeks of a session without having a clue as to their contents.

While democracy has never been noted for making all the trains run on time, it certainly should be more capable of avoiding the massive, legislative train wrecks that now tend to occur in the waning hours of a session.

It is not democracy, after all, that has produced such train wrecks at the end of the track, but rather the majority leadership's undemocratic tactics designed to compensate at the end of the process for its failure to make the democratic process work from the beginning, especially at the critical committee stage.

A Mandate for Change in The People's House

(A Paragraph-by-Paragraph Summary of the Republican Substitute for H. Res. 5, Adopting the Rules of the House for the 103d Congress)

The Rules of the House of the 102nd Congress would be adopted as the rules for the 103rd Congress together with the following amendments:

(1) Presentment of Bills to the President.—The Speaker would be required to submit to the President any bill originating in the House not later than ten calendar days after it has been finally agreed to by both Houses.

(2) Veto Messages.—Immediately after the reading of a veto message from the President, the Speaker would be required to put the question on reconsideration of the vetoed bill, without intervening motion (except to postpone consideration for not more than 10 legislative days), in order to prevent avoidance of a vote by indefinite referral to a committee.

(3) Broadcast Coverage.—The Speaker would be required to provide for uniform visual broadcast coverage of House proceedings throughout the day, which could include periodic views of the entire Chamber providing they do not detract from the person speaking.

(4) House Scheduling.—At the beginning of each session of the House, the Speaker shall announce a legislative program for the session which shall include target dates for the consideration of major legislation, weeks in which the House would be in session (with five-day work weeks assumed unless otherwise indicated), dates for district work periods, and the target adjournment date.

(5) Abolition of Office of Doorkeeper.—The Office of Doorkeeper would be abolished and its functions transferred to the Sergeant-at-Arms. The latter officer should be a nationally respected law enforcement professional.

(6) Oversight Reform.—Committee would be required to adopt oversight plans for the Congress and submit them to the Committee on House Administration by March 1st of the first session. The Committee on House Administration would report the plans to the House by March 15th together with any recommendations of the committee or joint leadership to ensure maximum coordination. Committees would be required to include an oversight section in their final activity reports reporting on the implementation of their plans. The Speaker would be authorized to appoint ad hoc oversight committees for specific oversight projects from committees sharing jurisdiction.

(7) Multiple Bill Referral Reform.—The joint referral of bills to two or more committees would be abolished, while split and sequential referrals would be retained. The Speaker would designate a committee of principal jurisdiction upon the initial referral of a bill.

(8) Early Organization of Committees.—House standing committees would be elected no later than the seventh calendar day after the beginning of a Congress; committees would be required to hold their organizational meetings no later than four calendar days after their election and complete it no later than seven days after their election.

(9) Equitable Party Ratios on Committees.—The party ratios on committees, subcommittees, select committees and conference committees would be required to reflect that of the full House (unless otherwise provided by House Rules).

(10) Control of Government Operations Committee.—When the President and a majority of the members of the Committee on Government Operations (and its chairman) shall be members of the other major political party.

SUMMARY OF COMPARATIVE DATA ON HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

(1) Time in Session.—In the 102nd (1991-92) Congress, the House was in session 277 days—21 fewer than the 92nd Congress (1971-72) and 26 fewer than the 97th Congress (1981-82). Nevertheless, the most recent House put in roughly 370 more hours than the two earlier Congresses being measured, for an average day of 6.5 hours compared to 4.8 and 4.7 for the 92nd and 97th, respectively. (Table 1.)

(2) Legislative Output.—House committees reported 696 public measures in the 102nd Congress—314 less than the 92nd but 95 more than the 97th. The most recent House passed 932 public bills and resolutions compared to 970 for the 92nd and 704 for the 97th. Of the measures passed by the House in the 102nd, 34% were unreported, compared to 4% in the 92nd and 11.5% in the 97th—figures which roughly approximate the percentages of commemoratives in each Congress (commemoratives usually are not reported from committee). (Table 1.)

(3) Public Enactments.—The number of public laws enacted in the 102nd Congress, 590, is roughly the same as 20 years ago in the 92nd (607). But whereas commemorative laws comprised only 7.6% of total public enactments 20-years ago, today they comprise 32% of all public laws. When commemoratives are subtracted from the total, the 102nd Congress enacted 162 fewer substantive laws than the 92nd, but 35 more than the 97th. It should be noted that while the average number of pages per public statute 20 years ago was 3.8, ten years ago it was 9.2; and while this figure is not yet available for the 102nd Congress, in the 101st Congress the average number of pages per public law was 12.8. (Table 1.)

(4) Committees, Subcommittees, Staff and Costs.—The number of House standing committees has remained relatively constant over the last two decades—21 two decades ago and 22 in both the 97th and 102nd Congresses. The number of select committees was four in the 92nd Congress, three in the 97th, and six in the 102nd. The number of subcommittees of House standing and select committees has grown from 136 to 158 between the 92nd and the 102nd Congresses—a 16% increase. The number of committee staff has grown from 889 to 2,295—a 158% increase. The cost of operating the House over the last two decades has grown from $257.6 million for the two-year period of the 92nd Congress to $1.3 billion for the 102nd Congress—a 421% increase. (Table 1.)

(5) Special Committee Procedures.—Of the 28 standing and select committees in the 102nd Congress, 23 permitted proxy voting and 19 allowed one-third of the membership to constitute a quorum to conduct business (except for reporting measures). (Table 2.)

(6) Member and Staff Party Ratios on Committees.—Whereas Democrats comprised 61% of the House membership at the beginning of the 102nd Congress, their representation on 9 of the 28 standing and select committees was 63% or greater. And on 17 of those panels, majority staff comprised 70% or more of the total. On 13 of the 28 House panels, the staff to member ratio was greater than 2 to 1; and on 7 of those panels, it was 3 to 1 or more. (Table 3.)

(7) Open vs. Restrictive Rules.—Whereas in the 95th Congress only 15% of the rules reported from the Rules Committee providing for the original consideration of legislation limited the amendment process, by the 101st Congress 55% of the rules were restrictive, and in the 102nd Congress 66% were restrictive. (Table 4.)

(8) Restricting Instructions on Motions to Recommit.—Whereas in the 95th Congress, three order of business resolutions (or rules) limited or denied the minority's right to offer motions to recommit bills with amendatory instructions, in the 100th Congress this reached a peak with 24 restrictive rules. In the 101st Congress, 21 rules limited this right. But, due mainly to repeated points of order by the minority against such rules, in the 102nd Congress the number had shrunk to 7. (Table 5.)

(9) Waivers of the Three-Day Layover Requirement.—In the 95th Congress, the Rules Committee reported rules on 19 occasions which set aside the House requirement for a 3-day layover of bills after the report is available to Members. In the 101st Congress this was done on 23 occasions, and in the 102nd Congress on 18 occasions. These figures do not include rules waiving all points of order against a measure, some of which include 3-day layover violations. (Table 6.)

(10) Unauthorized Appropriations.—More and more programs are being funded without the required prior enactment of authorizing legislation. In fiscal years 1991 and 1992, 122 unauthorized laws were funded to the tune of $71.4 billion, according to CBO figures. (Table 7.)

(11) Budget Act Waivers.—Instances in which "rules" from the Rules Committee have waived specific provisions of the Budget Act of waived all points of order (which includes all provisions of the Budget Act) have grown since the Budget Act was first enacted in 1974. Such waivers comprised 19% of all rules reported in the 96th Congress. They peaked in the 99th Congress when they comprised 65% of all rules. Since then there has been a slight decline to 51% in the 100th, 56% in the 101st, and 47% in the 102nd. (Table 8.)

(12) Suspension of the Rules.—Measures may be considered under a suspension of the rules on Mondays and Tuesdays of each week. Under this procedure, bills are debatable for 40-minutes, are not subject to amendment, and must be passed by a two-thirds vote. The number of measures which have passed under suspension has increased from 38% of all bills passed in the 95th Congress, to 52% in the 102nd Congress. (Table 9.)

(13) Select Committee Costs.—Of the four non-legislative select committees in the 102nd Congress which were not terminated at the end of the Congress, the Permanent Select Committee on Aging is the oldest, dating back to 1975 and costing a total of nearly $22 million over its 18-years of existence; Narcotics is next: 17-years, $10.5 million; Children, Youth and Families: 10-years, $7-million; Hunger: 9-years, $5.3-million. Taken together, the four select committees have been authorized $44.7 million since their inception. (Table 10.)

102nd (1991–92)	109	37	34	72	66

[1] Total rules counted are all order of business resolutions reported from the Rules Committee which provide for the initial consideration of legislation, except rules on appropriations bills which only waive points of order. Original jurisdiction measures reported as privileged are also not counted.

[2] Open rules are those which permit any Member to offer any germane amendment to a measure so long as it is otherwise in compliance with the rules of the House. The parenthetical percentages are open rules as a percent of total rules granted.

[3] Restrictive rules are those which limit the number of amendments which can be offered, and include so-called modified open and modified closed rules, as well as completely closed rule, and rules providing for consideration in the House as opposed to the Committee of the Whole. The parenthetical percentages are restrictive rules as a percent of total rules granted.

[1] This is based on rules providing for the initial consideration by the House of bills or joint resolutions and does not include rules for simple and concurrent resolutions, conference reports or rules to dispose of Senate amendments to House bills.

[2] ARI stands for "amendatory recommittal instructions." Rules which limit ARI are those which restrict amendments in the House as well as Committee of the Whole or directly limit amendments in the motion to recommitt.

[3] Rules which deny amendatory recommittal instructions are those which bar all amendments in the House; which omit the proviso "with or without instructions" when a substitute is made in order as original text; or which directly prohibit instructions in the recommittal clause of the rule.

[4] This refers only to rules providing for the original consideration of legislation.

[1] Sec. 302(a) requires that the joint explanatory statement on a budget resolution conference report include an allocation by committee of outlays, and new budget-, entitlement-, and credit authority.

[2] Sec. 302(c) prohibits the consideration of any legislation reported from a committee which has not filed its section 302(b) suballocation..

[3] Sec. 302(f) prohibits the consideration of legislation which exceeds a committee's sec. 302(b) suballocation for discretionary new budget authority, new entitlement authority, or new credit authority.

[4] Sec. 303(a) prohibits the consideration of legislation providing new budget authority, new entitlement authority, new authority, or a change in revenues or public debt before the budget resolution for that year is adopted. [Note: This provision was modified with the enactment of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings I, to exempt from the point of order any appropriation bill considered in the House after May 15th, even though a final budget resolution is not in place (P.L. 99–177, effective Dec. 15, 1985).].

[5] Sec. 305(a) prohibits consideration of a budget resolution prior to the sixth day after it is reported.

[6] Sec. 311 prohibits consideration of any legislation which would exceed the outlay ceiling or revenue floor contained in the most recent budget resolution.

[7] Sec. 401(a) prohibits consideration of legislation providing new contract or borrowing authority not provided for in appropriations act.

[8] Sec. 401(b) prohibits the consideration of legislation providing new entitlement authority which becomes effective during the fiscal year which ends in the calendar year in which the bill is reported.

[9] Sec. 402(a) prohibits the consideration of any bill authorizing new budget authority for a fiscal year if not reported on or before May 15th preceding the beginning of such fiscal year. [Note: This provision was repealed with the enactment of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings I on Dec. 15, 1985.].

[10] Sec. 402 prohibits legislation containing new credit authority except as provided in appropriations acts..

[11] Blanket waivers counted here are those provision in a rule which waive all points of order against a bill or committee amendment in the nature of a substitute made in order as original text for amendment purposes. Not only do blanket waivers set aside all standing House rules, but all provisions of the Budget Act as well.

[12] To provide a constant for comparison purposes, sec. 402(a) waivers have been subtracted from total waives here because the section was repealed on Dec. 15, 1985 (see #9 above).

COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE: THEIR EVOLUTION AND FUNCTIONS

(By Don Wolfensberger, Minority Chief of Staff, House Rules Committee)

"The spending of money is one of the two things that Congress invariably stops to talk about; the other thing being the raising of money. The talk is made always in the Committee of the Whole, into which the House resolves itself whenever appropriations are to be considered. While members of this, which may be called the House's Committee of Supply, representatives have the freest opportunity of the session for activity, for usefulness, or for meddling, outside the sphere of their own committee work."[1]—Woodrow Wilson.

INTRODUCTION

Definition—The Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, more often referred to as the "Committee of the Whole", is the House of Representatives operating as a committee on which every Member of the House serves. The House of Representatives uses this parliamentary device to take procedural advantage of a somewhat different set of rules governing proceedings in the Committee than those governing proceedings in the House. The purpose is to expedite legislative consideration.[2]

Committees of the whole[3] in the U.S. House of Representatives have their origins in the British Parliament and in various American colonial-era assemblies. Neither committees of the whole, or any other committees of Congress, are provided for in the Constitution. But Congress, like its British counterpart, has always found it both convenient and necessary to delegate its responsibilities to different types of committees.

While committees are usually thought of as being smaller subgroups of their parent bodies, committees of the whole are unique in that they, as their name implies, are comprised of the entire membership of their parent House of Representatives. The purposes for such committees have changed somewhat since the origination of the concept in 17th Century England, though one rationale has remained constant throughout: the business to be considered by the committees was thought to be so important to the country as to warrant the full participation of all duly elected Representatives in their deliberations and decisions.

THE BRITISH ANTECEDENT COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE

As Bradshaw and Pring have observed in their book, Parliament and Congress, "The power over money goes to the heart of government. The nature of the financial bargain struck between legislature and executive determines whether liberty and representation are effective."[4]

In Britain, the authors note, the historic development of this bargain hinged on the relationship between the monarchy and Parliament, "and later, after much blood had been spilt, of a strong executive power operating through the Crown's prerogatives, to Parliament."[5]

From the earliest days, the monarch possessed a large revenue base and customary dues and was therefore independent of Parliament except for extraordinary needs, such as waging wars. To cover such needs, the monarch would look to the House of Commons for a bill of "aids and supplies." From such bills, the Commons was able to strike a bargain with the King: in return for the needed "supplies," certain remedies would be required by legislation or administrative action.[6]

From this basic bargain, the House of Commons was able to move against extra-parliamentary expedients used by Elizabeth I and the Stuarts for raising money, until eventually, with the Bill of Rights of 1688, it finally disposed of royal claims to impose taxes on its own authority, with this historic declaration: In Parliament: That levying money for or to the use of the Crown by pretence of prerogative without grant of Parliament, for longer time or in other manner than the same is or shall be granted, is illegal.[7]

The foreign and defense policies of William and Mary and subsequent monarchs enabled the House of Commons to establish an effective control on public finance based on the regular appropriation of moneys for particular purposes. This control extended not only to the old "extraordinary" grants, appropriated in a series of annual votes, but over ordinary expenditures as well, including granting the King a regular income, known as the "civil list," for the ordinary expenses of government. Over the years, the Commons transferred more and more of these ordinary expenditures from the civil list, which the King could spend as he pleased, to the category of expenditures which was voted annually and which was therefore under the control of the Parliament. By the end of the 18th century, this civil list had been narrowed to the expenditures of the Royal household.[8]

This expansion of Parliament's authority over finance for a wide variety of purposes required special machinery to ensure that the money it appropriated was indeed being expended for the purposes and policies intended, and for no others. Initially, this machinery took the form of small committees of investigation within the Parliament to keep a tight hold on financial policy in every field of government and to investigate the misappropriation of funds. But the committees that survived in the 17th century were not the small committees, but committees of the whole house: the Committee of Supply, which started in 1620; and the Committee of Ways and Means, which started in 1640. As Bradshaw and Pring point out, though, these were committees "in name only since every member of the House belonged to them," and their real purpose was to allow "the Commons to discuss the royal demands for finance informally and under a chairman of their own choosing rather than under the 'King's man', as the Speaker was then regarded."[9]

De Alva Stanwood Alexander, a former Member of the U.S. House of Representatives, in his History and Procedure of the House of Representatives, observes of this birth of the Committee of the Whole concept in England that: It originated in the time of the Stuarts, when taxation arrayed the Crown against the Commons, and suspicion made the Speaker a tale-bearer to the King. To avoid the Chair's espionage the Commons met in secret, elected a chairman in whom it had confidence, and without fear of the King freely exchanged its views respecting supplies.[10]

In addition to the committees of the whole House on Supply, and Ways and Means, the House of Commons used the committee of the whole device for the consideration of money resolutions which authorized expenditures in connection with bills.[11]

In addition to the element of secrecy, the committee of the whole device had appeal to Members because of their suspicion and distrust of the smaller committees which were comprised only of supporters of measures. As Bradshaw and Pring explain the appeal of the committee of the whole alternative:

"Not only did this remove the King's most powerful agent [the Speaker], but it also enabled his other supporters to be outnumbered; it denied to the grandees the power to make important decisions in small groups which they could dominate. It was an attempt to ensure that from then on members would always be equal in status, that decisions would be communal, that no small privileged group would control the functions of the House. It threw open to the whole House such secrets as had hitherto been reserved to committee members only."[12]

[11] In the House of Commons procedural reforms of 1965-67, these financial committees were abolished in favor of consideration by the House. The use of committees of the whole for other important matters was eventually replaced by a Standing Committee System to debate and amend bills, though committees of the whole are still used from time to time on minor legislation not requiring consideration by Standing Committees. Bradshaw and Pring, op. cit., p. 216.

While this evolution of the authority of the Commons over finance through secret committees of the whole might lead one to conclude that the Parliament had established itself as independent of the Crown, nothing could be further from the truth. As Bradshaw and Pring point out, while the personal authority of the monarch was trimmed with the civil war and revolution of 1688, "the English Constitution remained monarchical in essence." And they go on:[13] "The chosen way forward in England was to leave the power of initiating expenditure where it had traditionally been, that is, with the Crown, but now with the Crown acting through ministers responsible to itself."

Another observer has put it even more bluntly: "The Crown demands money, the Commons grant it, and the Lords assent to the grant; but the Commons do not vote money unless it be required by the Crown; nor do they impose or augment taxes unless such taxation be necessary for the public service, as declared by the Crown through its constitutional advisers."[14]

The latter quote highlights another aspect of the British Parliament which differentiates it from the U.S. Congress, and that is that the House of Commons may appropriate no money unless it has been recommended by the Crown—a prohibition first passed by the House of Commons in 1706, and which has since become a Standing Order of the House.[15]

THE PRE-CONSTITUTIONAL AMERICAN COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE

While it was this continued monarchical control over taxes and spending that eventually led to the American revolution and a new system of Government under which the legislative and not the executive was to have primacy over such matters, the concept of the committee of the whole not only survived the ocean voyage, but the American Revolution as well.

It is not difficult to understand why the concept of secret deliberations out of earshot of the King would have special appeal in the colonial assemblies, the Continental Congress, the Congress of the Confederation and the Federal Convention to frame the Constitution. And, indeed, it was frequently utilized in all of these legislative assemblies in early American history.

According to former House Parliamentarian Asher C. Hinds: The Continental Congress used the Committee of the Whole frequently, considering its important business and giving private audiences to foreign ministers therein. In the early days of the struggle for independence, it resolved into a "Committee of the Whole to take into consideration the state of America."[16]

The Federal Convention, called to frame the Constitution, convened on May 14, 1787, and adjourned from day to day until a majority of delegates had arrived. On May 29th, the Convention adopted the following resolution: Resolved, That the House will meet tomorrow to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House to consider the state of the American Union.[17]

Thus we learn, for example, that after the Convention decided on a National Government to consist of three branches, it took up the question of whether the National Legislature should be unicameral or bicameral. House historian George B. Galloway writes that the question was apparently decided without debate, "first in the Committee of the Whole with Pennsylvania alone dissenting, and finally in the Convention itself by a vote of seven States to three (Maryland divided) that the new Congress should have two branches."[18]

Not only is the name of the later House of Representatives' Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union hinted at by the Continental Congress' Committee of the Whole to take into consideration the state of America, and the Constitutional Convention's Committee of the Whole House to consider the state of the American Union, but, as Hinds suggests, also from the Constitutional provision in section 3 of Article II that the President should "from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union."[19] [Indeed, even today the "Message of the President of the United States to the Congress on the subject of the State of the Union" is placed on the Union Calendar with the notation: "Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union."[20]]

As Alexander points out, all of these various names for Committees of the Whole are derived from the English prototype "Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Nation."[21]

THE FIRST HOUSE

The first House of Representatives was scheduled to convene in New York on March 4, 1789, but only 13 of the 59 elected Representatives appeared and took their seats on that day. So, the House met and adjourned each day until finally, on April 1st, the 30th Member appeared to provide the requisite quorum under the Constitution.

On that first day, the House elected its Speaker and other officers. And, on April 2nd, it appointed an 11-member select committee to prepare and report standing rules and orders of proceeding. Five-days later the committee reported back a set of four fundamental rules which were adopted by the House. The first three dealt with the duties of the Speaker, decorum and debate, and bill procedure. The fourth rule prescribed the procedures of Committees of the Whole House in which bills were to be twice read, debated by clauses, and subjected to amendment.[22]

It was also established at the same time that it should be a "standing order of the day, throughout the session, for the House to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union." As Hinds observes, "Thus the two kinds of Committees of the Whole were recognized at that time. The use of the article 'a' instead of 'the' indicates what was the fact, that there was then no individuality and permanence to these committees."[23]

The distinction between the two types of Committees of the Whole in the first Congress is explained by Hinds as follows: So it is evident that in the First Congress, and for several subsequent Congresses, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was an arrangement for consultation chiefly. Whenever the House referred a matter they generally sent it to a Committee of the Whole House.[24]

Alexander elaborates on this distinction by noting that the function of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was for "the informal consideration of highly important matters before their reference to select or standing committees," whereas the function of the Committee of the Whole House was for the consideration of bills after they had been formally reported from select or standing committees. The Committee of the Whole House was also called the Committee of the Whole House on Ways and Means when it was used for considering appropriations and revenue measures reported from committees (comparable to the Committee of the Whole on Supply of the House of Commons discussed earlier).[25]

On November 13, 1794, the House adopted rules to ensure that all money bills would be considered in a Committee of the Whole House. These rules read in part as follows: No motion or proposition for a tax or charge upon the people shall be discussed the day on which it is made or offered, and every proposition shall receive its first discussion in a Committee of the Whole House. . . . All proceedings touching appropriations of money shall be first moved and discussed in a Committee of the Whole House.[26]

To cite an example used by Galloway of how this dual-Committee of the Whole system worked during the first Congress—After a problem such as the location of the permanent seat of the Federal Government had been discussed from every angle in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, it would be referred by House resolution to an ad hoc select committee with instructions to report a bill on the subject. Some days later the select committee would present its bill to the House, according to order, and after second reading the bill would be committed to a Committee of the Whole House. The House would then resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, the Speaker would leave the chair, another Member would take the chair and the Committee of the Whole House would consider and probably adopt amendments to the bill. Then the Speaker would resume the chair and the chairman of the Committee of the Whole would report the action to the House and deliver the proposed amendments at the Clerk's table where they would be twice read and usually agreed to by the House.[27]

Not every Member was ecstatic about this sometimes laborious process. Representative Fisher Ames, writing to a friend in July of 1789 about a revenue collection bill, described how the bill "was at first imperfect" so it was referred to a large and good committee which agreed on some principles and the clerk drew up the bill accordingly. Then it was considered in committee of the whole, "and we indulge in a very minute criticism upon its style. We correct spelling, or erase 'may' and insert 'shall', and quiddle in a manner which provokes me." Ames concluded that, "Our great committee is too unwieldy for this operation. A great, clumsy machine is applied to the slightest and most delicate operations—the hoof of an elephant to the strokes of mezzotinto."[28]

EVOLUTION OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE

Over the first five Congresses, Committees of the Whole House on the state of the Union were used to develop the guiding principles of all major measures before they were referred to select committees to work out the details and draft the bills. This process was used to develop the first tariff bill, the acts organizing the executive departments, and the first amendments to the Constitution. As Galloway observes of this process: "A committee of the Whole was the House itself under another name and in those days the House was small enough (65 Members) to function as a genuine deliberative assembly and to stage great debates on national questions."[29]

With the increase in business in the early Congresses there was a natural increase both in the number of select committees (more than 350 were formed in the Third Congress alone) as well as the time consumed in both types of committee of the whole. Congress saved some time by authorizing the Speaker, in 1790, to appoint all committees unless otherwise directed by the House. Previously all committees greater than three in number were elected. And, in 1794, the House empowered the Speaker to appoint the chairmen of committees of the whole who had also been previously subject to election by the committees.[30]

Because of the sheer volume of business, Congress began to delegate responsibility for initiating some legislation to standing or permanent committees. Four were established by 1795, and between 1802 and 1809, six more were added. Eventually, by the mid-1800's, a system of standing committees had replaced the original overview function of the early Committees of the Whole and the bill drafting functions of the select committees. Nevertheless, the products of the standing committees were still brought back for consideration in Committees of the Whole House.[31]

This eventually led to considerable congestion and confusion in committees of the whole House. Hinds points out that in 1817, "the practice of referring several bills to a single Committee of the Whole had resulted in delays, and a rule was adopted that no more than three bills should be referred to the same Committee of the Whole, and such bills should be analogous in nature."[32]

But even this attempt to better rationalize and clarify the uses of Committees of the Whole apparently confounded Members. As Hinds writes, "When the rules were revised, in 1860, this rule was dropped, Mr. Israel Washburn, Jr., of Maine, who presented the report, stated that the Committee on Rules 'were unable to understand what the rule meant, and saw no use in retaining it.'" And Hinds comments on this: "Mr. Washburn's statement affords a remarkable illustration of how a practice of the House may subvert a rule so thoroughly that the rule may in the course of time become an enigma."[33]

As early as 1822, Representative Charles Rich of Vermont had proposed a rule change to attempt to remedy the confusion. His proposal would have provided that, exclusive of "the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union," there should be three Committees of the Whole House: One on bills of a public or general nature, one on private or local bills, and one for private matters unfavorably reported from committees." The Speaker would place bills on the Calendar for consideration in the appropriate Committee of the Whole the next day, to be taken up in the order in which they appear on the Calendar, and any number of bills might be considered in the appropriate Committee of the Whole at the same sitting. However, the House declined to consider this rule.[34]

Two years later, in January of 1824, Rich renewed his proposition. While it apparently was not acted upon, it nevertheless became the practice without the adoption of the formal rule. By 1860, the new practice was so well-established that "the most experienced Members of the House could remember no other."[35]

This practice of having many Committees of the Whole, temporarily created for considering one, two or three bills, gradually changed until there came to be two committees, "each with an individuality and calendar of its own," and with it a more marked distinction between the Committees of the Whole House and the Committees of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Whereas the Committees of the Whole House on the state of the Union were originally used to originate matters without such matters first being referred to them by the House, as early as 1833 references were made to this originating function as a usage of the past.[36]

In the place of this original function of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union as an arrangement for consultation, the idea evolved that it should become a committee that "should receive what may be called the greater matters of legislation," and that is the usage that has become crystallized in the current House Rule: the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union would receive public bills reported by the standing committees, while the Committee of the Whole House would receive private bills, even though under the early usage the Committee of the Whole House had received the greater proportion of both public and private bills. Until 1828, both appropriations and revenue bills were considered in the Committee of the Whole House; but since 1828, both classes of bills have been considered in the Committee on the Whole House on the state of the Union. But, as late as 1844, other classes of public bills were still being considered in the Committee of the Whole House.[37]

In the House Rules revision of 1880, the House adopted Rule XIII which officially established three calendars of business reported from committees: (1) a Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to which will be referred bills raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills of a public character directly or indirectly appropriating money or property; (2) a House Calendar to which shall be referred bills of a public character not raising revenue or directly or indirectly appropriating money or property; and (3) a Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House to which shall be referred all bills of a private character. However, as has been discussed above, two of the Calendars had existed for many years as indispensable to orderly procedure. An old rule No. 129, dating from January 25, 1839, referred to a Calendar of the private bills committed to the Committee of the Whole House; and old rule No. 114, dating from July 27, 1848, referred to a Calendar for bills sent to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The 1880 rules revision simply codified these earlier practices and rules and established a new House Calendar for public bills which did not raise revenue or directly or indirectly appropriate money. Bills on the House Calendar were to be considered in the House as opposed to either of the Committees of the Whole.[38]

In 1848, the House had adopted a rule (now rule XXIII, clause 4) providing that in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, bills were to be taken up and disposed of in their order on the Calendar, but when objection is made, a majority of the committee, shall decide, without debate, whether it should be taken up and disposed of or laid on the table. In 1880, this was revised to provide for bills to be taken up in their order on the Calendars, except bills raising revenue, for general appropriations, and for the improvement of rivers and harbors shall have precedence. And, when objection was made to the consideration of any bill, the committee would rise and report the matter to the House for determination without debate.[39]

The Appropriations and Ways and Means committees were also given privileged status by a separate rule (XVI, clause 9) for bringing up their bills in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union after the reading of the Journal on any day. While the privilege appears to remain in Rule XVI today for both committees, another rule change in 1975 removed the privilege from revenue measures from the Ways and Means Committee.

The various rules providing for the order of consideration of bills in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union were eclipsed by the evolving role of the Rules Committee in the last two decades of the 19th century to report "special rules" or "order of business resolutions" providing for the consideration of measures in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The effect of these privileged resolutions from the Rules Committee, once adopted by the House, was in turn to give privileged status to the bills mentioned therein—thereby permitting them to be taken up out of their order on the Calendar.

This is the practice that has been followed up to present day.

THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE TODAY

As has already been noted, there are today two kinds of Committees of the Whole: the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of public bills affecting taxes or spending; and the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of private bills, usually relating to claims of individuals against the government, special immigration status, or other special relief from the government.

In effect, only the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is utilized today since private bills tend to be considered "in the House as in the Committee of the Whole." This latter procedure is undertaken by unanimous consent or a special rule, dispenses with general debate (unless provided for in the consent request or special rule), allows for the consideration of amendments under the five-minute rule, but also allows the previous question to be ordered at anytime, thereby potentially cutting-off the amendment process before all sections have been read for amendment. By the same token, bills on the Union Calendar which have been reported from the House Committee on the District of Columbia may be called-up as privileged on "District Days" (the second and fourth Mondays of each month), and which should be considered in the Committee of the Whole, are, as a matter of modern practice, usually considered instead in the House as in the Committee of the Whole by unanimous consent.

Other bills on the Union Calendar, which should be considered in the Committee of the Whole, are often considered instead in the House under other procedures. These include unanimous consent for their consideration in the House; placement on a Consent Calendar which is called the first and third Mondays of each month; by consideration under a suspension of the rules procedure which is allowed on any Monday or Tuesday; or by provisions of a special rule reported from the Rules Committee and adopted by the House.

Today, the overwhelming majority of bills passed by the House are considered in the House under one of these alternative procedures to the Committee of the Whole. Of the 970 public bills passed by the House in the 102nd Congress, for instance, 507 or 52% were considered under suspension of the rules—a procedure providing for 40-minutes of consideration in the House, prohibiting amendments, and requiring a two-thirds vote for passage. Roughly one-third of the public measures passed and enacted are so-called "commemoratives" which designate certain days, weeks or months to recognize worthy causes or events, name buildings, roads, dams or places after people, etc. And most of these measures are considered by unanimous consent. Based on an analysis of special rules providing for the original consideration of public measures in the 102nd Congress, only about 10% of the bills considered by the House are considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union. In short, it is reserved today for the consideration of only the most important legislation.[40]

As mentioned in the definition contained in the introductory section of this paper, one of the main advantages of considering legislation in the Committee of the Whole is that the Committee operates under a special set of procedures that enable it to expedite consideration. Whereas a quorum in the House is 218 Members, a quorum in the Committee of the Whole is 100 Members. Whereas amendments in the House are considered under the one-hour rule (per Member), amendments in the Committee of the Whole are considered under the five-minute rule (per Member). Whereas the House can be tied-up in votes over various dilatory motions, in the Committee of the Whole it is not in order to offer motions to adjourn, to table, for the previous question, to recommit or refer, or to reconsider a vote by which an amendment is agreed to or disagreed to.

As has already been mentioned, most important legislation today is brought to the Committee of the Whole by means of a "special rule" or "order of business resolution" reported by the Committee on Rules and adopted by the House. The basic purposes of such a special rule are five-fold:

To give the bill privileged status for immediate consideration in the Committee of the Whole (including a means for resolving into the Committee of the Whole);

To provide for a limited period of general debate (and thereby avoid the prospect of every Member taking full advantage of the hour-rule in debate);

To provide for the consideration of amendments under the five-minute rule;

To ensure the right to offer a motion to recommit when the bill is reported from the Committee of the Whole back to the House; and

To order the previous question on the bill to final passage without intervening motion, thus precluding any additional debate or amendments back in the House after the Committee of the Whole has reported.

Thus, an atypical "open rule" (only 34% of the rules reported in the 102nd Congress allowed for an open amendment process[41]) might read as follows:

"Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1) to do good works and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and which shall not exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Good Works, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule, and each section shall be considered as having been read. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit."

As noted above, in recent times a more typical rule is restrictive (66% of the rules in the 102nd Congress limited the amendment process[42]). This means the rules are either closed (no amendments), or modified open or modified closed (allowing only for specified amendments). In addition, such special rules usually limit the debate time on each amendment made in order. Instead of in effect allowing every Member in the Committee of the Whole to speak five-minutes on each amendment, the rule might provide, for example, for only 10 or 20 minutes of debate on minor amendments and 30 to 60 minutes on major amendments—equally divided between the proponent and a Member opposed to the amendment.

And, it is less likely today that such restrictive rules will allow for amendments to amendments, though when it is done it is usually allowed to advantage a committee chairman to offer a substitute amendment, or to play-off competing alternative amendments in a "king-of-the-hill" procedure whereby the last amendment adopted is the one reported back to the House (regardless of whether an earlier offered amendment garnered a larger majority vote).

Until 1971, there were no recorded votes in the Committee of the Whole. Today, any 25 Members may stand and demand a recorded vote on any amendment.

Following the amendment process in the Committee of the Whole, the House rises and reports the bill back to the House with the amendments adopted and the recommendation that the bill be passed with the recommended amendments. The Speaker then announces that, under the terms of the special rule, the previous question is ordered (thereby shutting-off any additional debate or amendment in the House). The Speaker then asks whether any Member demands a separate vote on any amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole. If so, separate recorded votes are taken on those amendments after the remainder of the amendments are first voted en bloc. There is no opportunity to reconsider any amendments which were not adopted in the Committee of the Whole. So, for instance, if an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the entire bill had been adopted in the Committee of the Whole after numerous amendments had been adopted to it, unless the special rule makes special provision, only the substitute or first degree amendment (as so amended) is considered reported back to the House. And separate votes may not be demanded on amendments which had been adopted to it, no matter how major or controversial they may have been. After the Speaker puts the question on engrossment and third reading of the bill, and it is adopted, it is in order for any Member who is opposed the bill to offer a motion to recommit the bill to committee, with or without instructions. This right is reserved to the most senior minority member of the committee that reported the bill who is opposed to it in its present form. A simple motion to recommit, if passed, sends the measure back to committee. A motion to recommit with instructions to report back "forthwith" may be used to offer one final amendment(s) to the bill.

The work of the Committee of the Whole is seldom reversed or recommitted by the House for the simple reason that the work was done by the same House under a different name and using different procedures. Moreover, while the House could, by not automatically ordering the previous question, reopen consideration of amendments defeated in Committee, this would defeat one of the main purposes for having such a committee, and that is to expedite the business of the House.

CONCLUSION

The device of the Committee of the Whole originated in 17th Century England to protect the House of Commons in its deliberations over delicate financial matters affecting the Crown. In the latter half of the 20th Century, Committees of the Whole on major tax, spending and authorization matters have been abolished in favor of debate in the House or one of its standing committees, and inquiries or oversight by select committees. To this day, the Crown, represented through the Executive Ministers in Parliament, dominates the fiscal affairs of Government, and the House of Commons has little latitude in altering such policies.

In the United States, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has evolved from a body which originated debate to develop general guidelines for legislation which would than be fleshed-out by a select committee in detailed draft form. The bill would then be reported back to the House which would commit the bill to a Committee of the Whole House for further debate and amendment before being reported back to the House for final passage.

[42] Ibid.

With the growth of a standing committee system in place of select committees for each bill, the original purpose of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union became redundant and fell into disuse. In its place, the Committee of the Whole House of the state of the Union replaced the Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering important tax and spending bills reported from the standing committees; and the Committee of the Whole House was converted into a body to consider only private bills.

In short, the House of Representatives ended-up where the House of Commons began by establishing a special Committee of the Whole (a combination of the British Commons Committees on Ways and Means and Supply) to consider the most important and often controversial legislation both in terms of the relationships between the Executive and Legislative Branches, and between the Representatives and the represented.

It is not too difficult to discern why the British counterpart Committee of the Whole on revenue and spending measures has disappeared while the American counterpart has grown in importance and thrives. The U.S. Constitution, which was in part a reaction against the British system it replaced, intentionally gave the principal powers over taxing and spending to the Legislative rather than the Executive Branch.

While the Congress recognized the need for delegating even these powers to standing committees, it at the same time reserved to the full House, through the Committee of the Whole, the final review authority over the decisions of the standing committees, and the ability for all Members to participate in changing such important legislation. As has been already been pointed out, consideration by the House of such measures by other procedures does not allow for the same degree of participation or amendment, at least not without consuming considerably more time.

For all these reasons, the Committee of the Whole is not only different from the standing committees, but it survives and thrives precisely because it is considered a final check on the standing committees, much as the original committees of the whole in 17th Century England were an antidote to smaller committees. The Committee of the Whole is a convenient means for the House to duplicate as much of the work of the standing committee as it might find necessary to ensure that the final bill is a truly representative product.

De Alva Alexander has noted that under an earlier view, the Committee of the Whole was thought to be just another committee of the House. As an example of this, he cites a remark made on February 14, 1826, by Speaker John W. Taylor, "an exceptionally able and acute Speaker." In deciding a point of order as to whether a bill still pending in a standing committee could be considered as an amendment to a bill be considered in the Committee of the Whole, Speaker Taylor said that, "the Committee of the Whole [is] but a committee of the House, though a large one."[43]

But Alexander takes issue with Taylor as follows: But the more modern view holds that it is the House itself doing business under a special and less formal procedure, by means of which the entire membership is enabled to participate in the consideration of a bill, unhampered by roll-calls or the intervention of motions to adjourn, to refer, to postpone, for the previous question, and the like.[44]

Likewise, another renowned House historian, George B. Galloway, has already been quoted in this paper as writing that, "A Committee of the Whole was the House itself under another name* * *."[45]

And contemporary congressional scholar Walter J. Oleszek of the Congressional Research Service, writes in his book, Congressional Procedures and the Policy Process the following: The Committee of the Whole is simply the House in another form. Every legislator is a member. House rules require all revenue raising or appropriations bills to be considered first in the Committee of the Whole.[46]

To assert that the Committee of the Whole is nothing more than another advisory committee to the House is to completely misread history and misrepresent the true nature of such committees. In the final analysis, the Committee of the Whole, with its special authority for revenue and spending bills, is the very essence of the House exercising its special powers and prerogatives under the Constitution. Madison, in Federalist No. 58, put it this way:

The House of Representatives cannot only refuse, but they alone can propose the supplies requisite for the support of government. They, in a word, hold the purse—that powerful instrument. . . . This power over the purse may, in fact, be regarded as the most complete and effectual weapon with which any constitution can arm the immediate representatives of the people, for obtaining a redress of every grievance, and for carrying into effect every just and salutary measure.[47]

The Committee of the Whole remains today the critical device by which the House, acting together as "the immediate representatives of the people," retains its unique control over the purse—"that powerful instrument." It is, in every sense of the term, the House of Representatives exercising its most fundamental legislative powers as granted under Article I of the Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia [Ms. NORTON].

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, when we proposed this historic change, we recognized that the debate this afternoon would be inevitably partisan. After all, the five of us are Democrats. Can Members imagine my friends and colleagues on the other side of the aisle arguing as they just have if the five of us were Republicans? If so, they have a richer imagination than I.

They have conjured a conspiracy theory and sold it to some in the press. I take the floor this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, to announce that there indeed has been a conspiracy. There has been a conspiracy that brought this matter forward, and it is a conspiracy of the five Delegates who represent almost 5 million Americans. So I answer yes to the charge of conspiracy.

But at the same time, I feel I must tell the truth about the rest of the Democrats. They have been abidingly cautious, moving only after they received a third-party objective opinion about the law and about the Constitution.

My friends on the other side of the aisle, tomorrow morning you will not want to be where you now are, and those Democrats who are not with us, neither will you if this package fails, for you will then have to read the pages of the papers in Moscow and Pretoria. Can Members imagine what those pages will say when it is reported that some in the United States of America voted to deny the right to vote on the House floor to other Americans.

Vote the way you wish.

Vote the way you wish, if you are prepared for that.

We knew that this would be a partisan vote. A partisan vote against democracy, my friends, is still a partisan vote against democracy, and it will be registered as a vote against democracy.

As a constitutional lawyer by trade and training, I am the first to concede that there are two sides to this constitutional question, as there are to every question of this kind.

□ 1450

But, my friends, we have, by far, the better side of that constitutional argument. You, my friends, you who are Members of this House, are more than a little pregnant on this issue.

We are flush with precedent, and that is the way the Constitution must be interpreted. The precedent was set when the vote was granted in the committee two decades ago, and in those committees, we who are Delegates have votes that count for more than they will count on the floor of the House, because those committees are smaller, and our votes will be usually lost as yours are as well in this much larger body.

You have given us the right to introduce legislation. You have given us the right to debate. We are Americans, my friends. You have the power. You have the authority to go the rest of the way, and the world is looking to see who will stand back and not march forward.

If you vote against this package, it is you who vote against the precedent.

It is the Framers who set up this extra constitutional advisory body, the Committee of the Whole. It is they who struck the first blow, and you have been striking the blow ever since, when you have empowered Delegates over and over and more and more, and this is the final step in that democratic empowerment.

You, my friends, you have more to say on my budget than I do when it comes every single season before this House. You, my friends, have more to say on every law that makes its way to the House floor. That is wrong, my friends. That is un-American, my friends.

Let me say to you that this is not the first time other Americans have used my Constitution against me. Then, as now, I knew that the Constitution of my country was on my side. The Constitution of the United States of America is on the side of the Delegates, not on the side of those who oppose this package.

I ask you, my friends and colleagues, if you have already made up your mind, please reconsider this package. I ask you to vote for this package. Vote for strengthening democracy in the people's House. Vote for strengthening democracy, for proving that we will live by what we preach in the United States of America.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the very distinguished minority whip, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH].

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I am particularly delighted to be able to, at this time, answer the distinguished gentlewoman from the District of Columbia who is wrong in her precedents and her arguments.

If she will turn to page 31849, September 15, 1970, she will read the then-Member THOMAS FOLEY saying:

> Now, it is very clear, as the Resident Commissioner has said, that a constitutional amendment would be required to give the Resident Commissioner a vote in the Committee of the Whole or the full House.

She will see on the same page Mr. Sisk, I believe a Democrat of California, at that time saying:

> I am not here proposing to make any great constitutional argument. As I understand by the statement of the distinguished Resident Commissioner, there is no question he could not vote on the floor of the House as a constitutional matter.

There was no precedent set in 1970; simply historically, factually wrong.

Second, as a matter of democracy, I am prepared to vote today or tomorrow or next week to return the District of Columbia's population to the State of Maryland. That could be done by statute. I am prepared to vote for a rule to bring to the floor a constitutional amendment, which I would vote against, because I think the Founding Fathers were right, but a constitutional amendment which is what would be required under the Constitution, to make the current District of Columbia a State. It is clear in the Constitution. But I would be willing to vote for a rule to bring it to the floor.

But for the Democratic leadership, by vote of a majority, to muscle through five Delegates being allowed to vote on the floor of the House is unconstitutional, as I think we will prove in a lawsuit, and is an offense to every taxpaying citizen of the United States.

Let me talk about democracy. The principle of democracy is based on two things. One is, as the gentlewoman knows, one person, one vote. Under this Democratic proposed rule, 33,000 people in Samoa, on the House floor, will be the equal of 800,000 people in Montana. Three delegates representing less than half a congressional district will be able to outvote the entire State of New Hampshire, two Congressmen, will be able to outvote the State of Maine, two Congressmen.

It is insane, by rules of the House, to violate the principle of fair voting.

Let me go a step further and, by the way, if this body decided with the Senate and the President to make Puerto Rico a State, they would, in fact, be entitled to six or seven Congressmen, not one. So just on the basic principle, it is wrong.

But there is a second principle. The American Revolution was fought over the issue of no taxation without representation; it was not fought over the issue of no representation without taxation, being represented without taxation.

The fact is that under the Democratic proposal, there are four Delegates who currently represent areas that pay no taxes to the U.S. Treasury. They pay taxes to their own Commonwealth.

Let me just make this point: This proposal is a classic welfare-state power grab, and none of the Delegates got up and said, "I have a new idea, let us pay all of our taxes to the U.S. Treasury and then we will raise local taxes on our citizens as though we were a State." None of the Delegates came in and said, "I have this brand new idea." In fact, the District of Columbia is eager to have two Senators so they can raise taxes on the other 50 States to send the money to Washington. I understand that that is a legitimate power grab. That is a legitimate part of politics. But to come in here, by the rules of the majority, without the Senate acting, without the President acting, and by changing the rules of the House, to allow 33,000 nontaxpaying citizens in terms of the U.S. Treasury, they do not pay a dime; they pay all of that money that goes right back to their local government.

Would we not love it in Georgia if we could get every penny back to Georgia from the U.S. Treasury that we pay in Federal income tax? I mean, I will be able to work out a deal with the gentlewoman tomorrow morning if she wants to say I get to vote that none of the money from my district comes to the U.S. Treasury; it all comes right back home.

But this is an outrage.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], the very distinguished chairman of our Policy Committee.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, as far back as 1887, Lord Acton must have anticipated this moment when he famously proclaimed, "Power corrupts, and absolute power corrupts absolutely."

It is very helpful when you are dealing with a statute or a constitution to read the statute, read the Constitution, and article I, section 1, says,

> The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.
>
> 2. No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained the age to twenty-five years, and been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

Now, all of us just took a solemn oath to support and defend the Constitution. The echoes of our solemn oath are still lingering in this Chamber. But now we cannot wait to repudiate that oath in a raw exercise of political power that constitutes the first, and I hope the last, act of legislative arrogance and abuse of this embryonic 103d Congress.

During the endless, Iran/Contra debates, some in the Reagan-Bush administration were accused of lying or withholding information from Congress, misleading Congress, and this was characterized by many on your side of the aisle as shredding the Constitution.

□ 1500

Well, today here and now we immolate the Constitution in a curious demonstration of insecurity on the part of the majority party. What an abysmal way to begin the Clinton administration.

Yes, we are for democracy—do you mind adding the word "constitutional" to "democracy"? I hate to presume to instruct a professor of law from my old alma mater, but constitutional democracy; there is a difference.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HYDE. Yes; if I have any time left.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I will ask the gentleman from Illinois whether at the time, I believe it was a year and a half ago or almost 2 years ago, when the House voted and you voted to commit our troops to Desert Shield/Desert Storm, did you vote to commit the lives of the people in American Samoa to kill and die, if necessary?

Mr. HYDE. I voted to support the administration in Desert Storm.

I am not sure the gentleman did.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I did not.

Mr. HYDE. I rather think you did not.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I did not, and I am proud I did not. But that is not the question. The question is, Did that include the young women and men in American Samoa?

Mr. HYDE. Yes, and that vote did not amend the Constitution.

Mr. WASHINGTON. May I ask another question?

Mr. HYDE. I do not have the time. Would you get me some time?

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. EDWARDS of California). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Is the Chair aware that under those circumstances, then, it is all right for them to die but not to be represented in Congress?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair rules that that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I assume that we still have more time on this side than the other side, so I yield 2 minutes to the very fine gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLILEY].

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, this is a terrible idea, granting the Delegates votes in the Committee of the Whole.

I would like to quote the words of a famous Virginian who once served in this body, John Randall. "This idea is atrocious. It is like a dead mackerel on a moonlit night, it both shines and stinks." For the following reasons: Thomas Jefferson, early in the days of the Republic, under the Articles of Confederation, moved that Delegates be given the right to be heard but not to vote. We have heard quoted the words of our current Speaker in 1970, when the issue of the Delegate from Puerto Rico was on the floor, say the same, that they did not have the right to vote in the Committee of the Whole.

We have heard previous speakers say what an atrocious thing this does to one man, one vote. Even under this, if you recognize Puerto Rico with 1 vote, with 3½ million people, and Samoa with 46,000, they get the same vote.

Now, I will admit that the Delegate from the District of Columbia—it is a different case. They pay taxes. They are mentioned in the Constitution directly under the control of the Congress. But I would stipulate that the way to change that is by bringing legislation through the proper committees. And as the ranking member on the Committee on the District of Columbia, I would be happy to sit down with the Delegate and try to work the thing out. But it should go through the full Congress, not in a sudden, 1-day meeting, 2-day meeting of the Democratic caucus and then be jammed through this body, surely to be subject to constitutional scrutiny in a lawsuit on which I believe the House would be on very shaky ground.

Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the Members would vote for the motion to commit and give this matter more study. It is not the right thing to do today.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the proposed change in the rules of this House that would allow delegates from the territories and the District of Columbia to vote on the floor in the Committee of the Whole. This proposal is as ill-considered as it is unprecedented and unlawful.

Incredibly, on their first day to take up business on the floor, the 110 new Members of the House of Representatives are about to have part of their vote stolen. As for those of us in the minority, we are about to be robbed of half the gains that the voters gave us in this year's House elections.

Truly, today, Washington, DC will have a new reason to be known as the Nation's crime capital because today a majority of the Members of this House are poised to mug the Constitution and the taxpaying voters in every State.

In her article published yesterday in the Washington Post, my colleague, the Delegate from the District of Columbia, dismissed such criticisms as nothing more than a Republican conspiracy theory.

It wasn't Republicans who called this proposal an effort at "shameless political tyranny," it was the liberal New York Times. It wasn't Republicans who called the adoption of this proposal by the Democratic caucus "outrageous behavior," it was Roll Call—hardly an organ of right-wing opinion. And it wasn't Republicans who said the "Democrats are stretching the Constitution beyond its limits and inviting further partisan abuse," it was USA Today.

If there is a conspiracy afoot here, it is conspiracy of the thinking men and women of America who are unafraid to call this Democrat initiative what it truly is: a naked exercise of raw legislative power without regard for law, without regard for history, and without regard for right.

The proposal before us would allow Delegates to vote on virtually all legislation that comes before the House. In effect, this proposal would extend to Delegates legislative power virtually on a par with that of full Members of Congress. This the Constitution clearly forbids.

As my predecessor in the House from Virginia, John Randolph, once had occasion to remark, the proposal is like a rotten mackerel by moonlight, it both shines and stinks.

Nowhere does the Constitution provide for territorial Delegates. Rather, Delegates are solely creatures of statute. Since 1817, they have possessed the statutory right of debating but not of voting. The five Delegates currently in question are expressly restricted from voting by the very statutes, passed by the House, which created their offices.

History, law, and the Constitution notwithstanding, proponents of voting privileges for Delegates argue that the proposal is constitutional. In their view, voting in the Committee of the Whole is merely an advisory act.

Proponents claim that even though the vast majority of the business of the House is for all intents and purposes resolved in the Committee of the Whole, such votes do not amount to an exercise of legislative power.

By such reasoning, the House may next allow visitors in the gallery and the editorial board of the Washington Post the right to cast advisory votes on the House floor.

Indeed, why not allow those Members who have been named to President Clinton's Cabinet to continue to serve as committee chairmen and vote—after all, we are instructed today that such duties involve no real exercise of legislative power but are merely advisory.

Proponents cite a recent Congressional Research Service memorandum which concludes that "allowing a Delegate to vote in the Committee of the Whole is apparently consistent with present congressional interpretation of its constitutional authority." In other words, the CRS opinion comes down to an assertion that the proponents' constitutional justification for giving Delegates a right to vote on the floor is consistent with the proponents' constitutional justification for giving Delegates a right to vote on the floor.

Those who would approve the amendment before us are simply peering into a constitutional mirror and seem gratified to find their own reflections staring back at them. Their novel legal theory indeed reads like a conversation between characters in a Lewis Carroll story—words mean only what the proponents say they mean. Like true bureaucrats, they would turn the responsible exercise of legislative power into a infinite regression of advisory acts.

Although only too willing to wave what—in all honesty—is an ambivalent CRS memorandum as a battle-flag for their cause, proponents have been strangely silent about the Parliamentarian's October 2, 1992, memorandum, which states:

> The statutes establishing seats for the various delegates all recognize that Article I of the Constitution contemplates the exercise of the legislative power by Members. The House may not by an exercise of its rule-making authority contravene that constitutional mandate.

Proponents also ignore the first CRS memorandum, dated September 17, 1992, which concludes it is "unclear whether allowing the Delegate to vote in such committee would violate the Constitution."

In 1970, when the voting rights of the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico made its way to the floor of the House, it was you Mr. Speaker, who flatly, and in my view quite rightly, stated that the Constitution does not allow for Delegates to vote in the Committee of the Whole. Mr. Speaker, you knew then that the Constitution forbids Delegates to exercise the legislative power of members. At that time you came to the conclusion which history, law, and common sense conspire to compell: That if voting on the floor of the House on virtually all legislation that comes before it is not an exercise of legislative power in the constitutional sense, then nothing is.

Today, the Democratic caucus, which brought this proposal to the floor, is singing a different tune. I can only conclude that it is simply a coincidence that the caucus comes forward with this proposal as one of the first items of business after an election where, for the first time in years, Democrats were chosen as the Delegates from each of the territories and the District of Columbia, but Republicans made gains among House members.

It must also be a coincidence that this latest triumph for democracy will occur just in time to cut in half the gains voters gave to the Republicans in the House elections.

If a triumph for democracy is the same thing as a triumph for the Democratic caucus in rolling back what the voters thought they had accomplished last November, then certainly we do seem poised for just such a triumph.

Not only is the proposed rules change a grab for power at the expense of the Republican minority, but it is also a grab for power against those who pay taxes by those who do not. The territories, though they receive myriad Federal benefits, pay no Federal income tax. It is hardly right that they should share direct power over Federal taxing and spending decisions in Congress.

Before the territorial Delegates ask that they be able to vote on the floor of the House, they should ask that their constituents be taxed just as the constituents of voting Members are taxed.

The byword of the 1992 elections was "change." One of the first things that the Members of the 103d Congress are now asked to change are the results of those elections and undo the 10-vote advantage that the voters gave to Republicans. Part and parcel of that change, we are asked to give more power to people who don't pay taxes to take money from those people who do pay taxes. And, as the keystone to it all, justifications are advanced that make a mockery of traditional principles of constitutional governance and law.

Already it seems that the more things change in Congress, the more they stay the same.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the Members of this House to reject the proposal that is before them.

I also ask unanimous consent to have several CRS memorandums, the Parliamentarian's memorandum, and editorials from the New York Times, USA Today, and Roll Call inserted in the RECORD.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER].

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of respect for the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], who serves on the Committee on Foreign Affairs as well as the Committee on the Judiciary. He is a very bright, able Member of this body.

However, I believe he is absolutely incorrect, wrong, as he debates the constitutionality of this provision and would reject emphatically the implication that this was rushed into.

Mr. Blaz, General Blaz, Republican Representative from Guam, wrote in 1985 to the Congressional Research Service, asking them for their opinion as to whether or not Delegates could be allowed to vote in the Committee of the Whole.

So, as the distinguished lady from the District of Columbia pointed out, this is not a partisan issue. As you will hear in some time, Puerto Rico, whose Representative is on the floor, 3.6 million people, in 1898, as a result of the war, Puerto Rico became a part of the United States. Prior to that, Puerto Rico was able to vote in the Spanish Assembly. They lost democracy, perhaps. America prides itself on being the beacon of democracy.

I think the editorials demean this proposal. It is a shame. We were out-PR'd on this, I admit; but the fact of the matter is the substance of this proposal says, as Jefferson concluded, that non-State territories ought to be represented in this body. Jefferson said that; this is not a new idea.

Now, America owns five jurisdictions—four, let me be more precise, because of course the District of Columbia is in a different situation—four. And the issue we raise is do we want to allow for more, some more participation or not?

Now, why do we have a special amendment adopted today in the caucus and presented in this rule? Because we want to make sure that the one four hundred thirty-fifth vote that each one of us has in this body was not diminished. How do we do that? By saying that the Delegates can only vote in the Committee of the Whole; it is a committee. No final passage of any measure can occur in the Committee of the Whole. It has to come to the House of Representatives, where only the 435 constitutionally elected Members under these rules will vote. Not one iota of constitutional undermining of votes is provided for in these rules, period.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOYER. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BLILEY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I thank my friend from Maryland. Since he quoted Thomas Jefferson, I know he would want to quote him right. He said they should be heard. And I agree, we agree; there is no argument. But he also said there should be no vote. And if you are going to change that, every time—even when you gave them votes in the committee, it was done by legislation which went through the whole process that included the President's signature—if you are going to change anything else, it ought to be done in the same way.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Virginia for referencing our most distinguished founder of the Democratic Party.

Even Thomas Jefferson, even Thomas Jefferson fell short of extending democracy to all Americans, even Thomas Jefferson. Was that not sad that in his time he did not see that citizens of color also ought to have a vote or citizens who did not own property ought to have a vote or that women ought to have the vote. Yes, he was the man and a genius of his time, but even then he was not as fully inclusive then as we are going to be today.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent on official business for rollcall vote No. 3. Had I been present on the House floor I would have cast my vote as follows:

Roll No. 3—yea on Mr. GEPHARDT's motion to table Mr. SOLOMON's motion to refer Mr. GEPHARDT's privileged resolution to a bipartisan committee.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Ms. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained and thus was not present for the vote on the final adoption of House Resolution 5. Had I been present, I would have voted "no."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a resolution on the following title:

> S. Res. 2. That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions and concurrent resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S.J. Res. 1. Joint resolution to ensure that the compensation and other emoluments attached to the office of Secretary of the Treasury are those which were in effect on January 1, 1989.

S.J. Res. 2. Joint resolution to authorize the United States Secret Service to continue to furnish protection to the former Vice President or his spouse.

S. Con. Res. 1. Concurrent resolution to provide for the counting on January 6, 1993, of the electoral votes for President and Vice President of the United States.

S. Con. Res. 2. Concurrent resolution to extend the life of the Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies and the provisions of S. Con. Res. 103.

S. Con. Res. 3. Concurrent resolution providing for a recess or adjournment of the Senate from January 6 or 7, 1993 to January 20, 1993, and an adjournment of the House from January 6, 1993 to January 20, 1993.

RULES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the very distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest and especially of late to the partisan democratic arguments in favor of this rule change. I noted with interest reliance upon a Congressional Research Service opinion. In fact, that opinion does nothing more than call into question this whole scheme.

The conclusion of the opinion is that:

> Allowing a delegate to vote in the Committee of the Whole is apparently consistent with present congressional interpretation of its constitutional authority.

Entirely autologous: It says in short that you think you have the power to do this and nothing more.

In other parts of this opinion, this whole scheme is called into question for good reason. As is summed up in the delegate from the District of Columbia's own article, the essential argument here is:

> If delegate voting in the smaller committees is constitutional, then delegate voting in the larger Committee of the Whole is also constitutional.

That is like saying if eating one ice cream cone does not make you fat, then eating a whole ice cream store does not make you fat.

There is an enormous difference of degree here. Delegate voting in the Committee of the Whole is the exercise of legislative power reserved by the Constitution for Representatives from States.

The authoritative Journal of Proceedings of the Congress, the Congressional Quarterly, said in its December 12 issue:

> The House considers almost all important bills under a parliamentary framework known as the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, which is simply the full House in another form.

Earlier this afternoon, I watched with some emotion as the distinguished Republican leader handed over the gavel to Speaker FOLEY. That is the closest that BOB MICHEL is going to get to that chair for the next 2 years, despite his 36 years of service. He has never had the opportunity to sit in that chair, and yet what the Democrats propose to do with this rule change is give five Democrats who are not Representatives from States the power to sit in that chair, wield the gavel, and interpret the rules, something that even this Representative will not have the power to do.

This is a crime. When Speaker FOLEY said it is unconstitutional, he said it was clearly unconstitutional.

When you ask for nonpartisanship, do not behave this way. There will be none until we restore honesty and civility to this Congress and end this perfidy.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SERRANO].

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Speaker, we can muddle this issue as much as we want to and we can use the Constitution the way we have never used it before, to divide people and to talk about different kinds of citizenship.

The issue to me is a simple one. Take my case. I was born in an American colony, a colony that was taken over by the United States through no choice of that colony's own decision.

I came to the United States. I am a Member of Congress. I have cousins who live in my district who vote for me. I have cousins who live in Puerto Rico who vote for Mr. BARCELÓ. In fact, they told me they did. They cannot get a Representative with a full vote.

Now, are we speaking about a full vote for him? We should, but we are not.

We are saying that we are going to allow him to participate in the Committee of the Whole and then we are saying that if it works to the disadvantage of the House, we are going to undo what he did with the amendment we put in.

So actually, let us not kid ourselves. We are not doing much, but it is the best we can do now.

And how the gentleman from New York, who I have dealt with for a long, long time, who I know is a decent man who believes in democracy and justice, can toot the party position that this is unconstitutional, that this is improper, when all this is saying is that we are going to establish once and for all whether or not we have different kinds of citizenship.

Is my citizenship worth as much as yours? Is my citizenship worth the same had I stayed in Mayaquez and not moved to the Bronx? Is my cousin's citizenship in Bayamon-Mayaquez worth the same? And is CARLOS ROMERO BARCELÓ, former mayor and former State senator, worth less than I am?

At the minimum, he is worth a vote in the Committee of the Whole, at the minimum.

And now, let me tell you the last part that bothers me. We are spending a lot of time continuing to tell the world how to behave. We help people. We sometimes do not help people, but sooner or later somebody is going to come to us from one of those countries and say, "Didn't you have a debate where you didn't even give your delegates a semi-equal opportunity to participate and you are telling us to get rid of colonies and you are telling us to change our ways and you are telling me to hold elections and you will not allow people to hold elections or even to vote in one of your committees when it becomes the Committee of the Whole?"

Then to hear the gentleman from Georgia say that Guam or Samoa are too small. Were they too small to be invaded in the case of Puerto Rico?

Puerto Rico is not large, but it was large enough for American troops to land by water. It was large enough for Puerto Rican troops to leave during Desert Storm and all the other wars to go and die. Some of them did not even speak English, and their last words were in Spanish on the battlefield.

Let us just understand that this is a moral issue as much as it is any other kind of issue.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. EDWARDS of California). The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SERRANO] has expired.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me if I give him 30 seconds?

Mr. SERRANO. Yes.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SERRANO. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, let me just say to my very, very good friend, who I served with for many years in the New York State lower house in the assembly. I believe the gentleman has great integrity and I really respect him; but the gentleman knows that we have a great Constitution. There are some things in our Constitution that I do not like. It allows burning the American flag. I have been trying to change that. It does not allow for a balanced budget amendment. I want to change it that way.

The Republican platform calls for statehood for Puerto Rico. I am for that, and if they want to vote for statehood, let us bring this in and we will give them six new Members of Congress from down there, so it is just a matter of difference.

Mr. SERRANO. If I may just answer the gentleman, to say that the Constitution that was imposed on me when the invasion came in 1898, my interpretation of it is that it allows me to be equal to the people in Puerto Rico.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's point is well taken.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, we have had an interesting discussion about democracy here. Actually the democracy that the Democrats are talking about is a situation that they have now defined the Delegates when they vote when it counts, it does not count, and when it does not count, it counts. It seems to me that is an odd way of describing democracy.

But I want to talk a little bit about some of the other rules, not just the Delegate rule, because there are some other things in here which are pretty sad and pretty pathetic.

As a matter of fact, the slaughterhouse rules that we are about to adopt undermine the basic functioning of democracy and are an affront to free men and free women.

Let me give you just a couple examples. To have the committees meet while the House is in session, they say this makes the House more efficient. What it really does is assure that the deliberative function of the House will be further eroded and that Members will be even less likely than present to be informed about the floor amendments that they are asked to vote upon. That seems to me to be an undermining of the way the House operates.

Beyond that, what the Democrats propose to do is move to a concept, they have come up with this idea of a rolling quorum in committees, which means literally a committee chairman could pass a bill out on his own.

Now, understand this. What could happen if you could have all the members of a committee called to the floor to vote because they are meeting at the same time the House is meeting, the chairman could stay there and literally pass a bill out and then declare a rolling quorum that could go on for hours, could go on for hours, could go on for weeks until he finally got the bill passed. That is a perversion of the legislative process and should not be allowed to happen.

They have another rule in here that will allow the Speaker of the House to take people off conference committees. In other words, if there is a Republican on the conference committee that is causing problems, the Speaker can reach in and pull that Republican off the conference committee and stop the problems.

As a matter of fact, the Speaker could pull all the Republicans off the conference committee and not replace a one of them under the rule.

Talk about undermining democracy and perverting the system, that undermines and perverts the system in ways that I do not believe have ever been done.

The question of privilege change that is in this particular bill, questions of privileges where it is a way the minority used to uncover aspects of the House post office and House bank scandals. And guess what, one of the first things the Democrats do when they come back with their new rules is undermine the ability of the minority party to bring discipline in the House of Representatives to uncover and discuss scandal.

It seems to me these are things which are very, very fundamentally wrong. It is a sad and pathetic day when we bring to the House floor rules which are designed not to enhance democracy, but to pervert it. That is what this rules package does. It ought to be voted down.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER].

□ 1520

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of simply commenting on the three points raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER]

First of all, Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman did not note, many of the committees can now meet while the House is in session under our present rules.

Mr. WALKER. By unanimous consent.

Mr. HOYER. No. Under our rules the Committee on Ways and Means does not need unanimous consent to work, nor does the Committee on Rules, nor do a number of other committees, so this adds on approximately half of the committees onto that procedure.

The gentleman also did not note that this is customary practice. It is not something unique. In fact what happens is, and in practice, and the American public certainly ought to know this, is that the provision in the rule is simply used for delay and distraction when the committees are considering things that the minority party does not like.

With respect to a rolling quorum; let us think about a rolling quorum We have a rolling quorum right here in the House. We have a rolling quorum here in the House. My colleagues come in, and they vote, and they leave, and they do not have 218 necessarily in the Chamber all the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. EDWARDS of California). The time of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER] has expired.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. I yield 30 additional seconds to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HOYER. So, Mr. Speaker, to that extent it is exactly the same procedure. All it is saying is that every committee member does not have to be in the room at every time.

Third, we all know the Speaker. The Speaker is not an arbitrary or capricious individual. I think the comments on the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] reflected that, and I doubt very seriously whether the Speaker would ever in any way take a Republican off a conference committee. In fact, some of our Democrats perhaps are concerned about this. What it does do is provide for making sure that deadlock does not occur, which is what concerns the American public.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Louisiana for yielding because some of what the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER] said deserves an answer.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, most committees of the Congress have to get unanimous consent to come to the floor, and that is the rule that is being changed.

Second, the rolling quorum does not work very well on the House floor. If my colleagues look around right now, we are discussing the most important rules package in some time, and we have very few people here because of rolling quorums in the House. That is what is going to happen again in committees, and the Speaker can, in fact, utilize this power in ways which are abusive. It gives him that kind of power. I would hope this Speaker would not, but to change the rules in this manner does undermine the ability of the minority to have much trust in the fact that, if we raise questions in the conference committees, we will not be disciplined.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's statement and share his sentiment.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER] and others may recall that last spring there was blood on the floor of the House of Representatives. In the aftermath of the bank scandal, the restaurant scandal, the post office scandal, the U.S. public was absolutely outraged, and so the Speaker and the leader got together, if the gentleman will remember, and they formulated a bipartisan task force to at least meet and see if we could come to some agreement, some arrangement whereby the rules would be more fair to the minority, the rules would provide comity for Members to express their points of view. Well, we met. We had a lot of individual meetings on the Democrat side and on the Republican side. We got together finally and met several times, and all of the proposals that were brought forth were kind of left on the table, and we decided that we were not getting anywhere, and we decided not to meet anymore. But at least we had the hope that, when this year rolled around, we went into the 103d Congress, that the rules would be better, that they would be improved, that they would be a little bit more fair.

All of a sudden we find out that even though Republicans gained 10 seats, the Democrats are diluting that gain by adding 5 seats from people who do not even represent States of the United States of America.

Then we are seeing also a House counsel, a simple little provision, but it was important to us because it was determined that too many times the Speaker would allow the House counsel to go out and file under proceedings and individual proceedings without letting the minority know about it. The House of Representatives, the U.S. Congress, was involved in litigation that no one knew anything about. So, all we said was, "Look, let's have an arrangement whereby the Speaker and the minority leader get together, and appoint a counsel and agree on a counsel, and that he will engage in proceedings pursuant to an agreement from a legal advisory committee, and, if they can't reach a unanimous agreement at the advisory committee, that there will be a vote with the House as to whether or not we should engage in those legal proceedings." It was a simple, simple, reasonable suggestion, and it was totally rejected, totally left on the table, not only in our meeting last year, but also by the Democrat caucus in these rules.

The point here today is that not only are we not reforming this institution, but that the tyranny of the majority is tightening the noose around the minority to give them less of an opportunity to express their point of view.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from American Samoa [Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA].

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, I don't know how I can adequately address the momentous issue now before us, but with my colleagues' indulgence, I would be most appreciative if I could receive your attention for the next few minutes that have been allotted to me.

Mr. Speaker, our critics have argued that delegates' voting privileges should not be extended because of the number of constituents they represent. Mr. Speaker, I would be the first person to admit my constituency is by far the smallest when compared to the rest of the Members of the House. But, Mr. Speaker, throughout the history of this grand institution, since the establishment by law of territorial Delegates over 200 years ago—there has never been to my knowledge any requirement or statutory stipulation conditioning representation in Congress for territories, commonwealths, or even the Federal district based upon population.

If population was the determinative factor, Mr. Speaker, I submit the territory of American Samoa should never have been authorized a delegate seat in the Congress. Mr. Speaker, about 15 years ago, 153 Members of this body—both Democrats and Republicans, from the most conservative to the most liberal—signed on as cosponsors to authorize American Samoa a Delegate seat in the Congress.

For historical perspective, let me share with you some data on populations and delegate representatives in this Chamber.

Year delegate provided by Congress and territory	Census	Population
1. 1800: Indiana	(1800)	6,000
2. 1805: Michigan	(1810)	5,000
3. 1809: Illinois	(1810)	12,000
4. 1849: Minnesota	(1850)	6,000
5. 1861: Dakota—North/South	(1860)	5,000
6. 1868: Wyoming	(1870)	9,000
7. 1906: Alaska	(1900)	64,000

Mr. Speaker, three months from now, the residents of my district will be celebrating the 93d year commemorating the raising of the American flag in American Samoa. We are immensely proud of this longstanding relationship and association with the United States.

Let me emphasize again, Mr. Speaker—it is not a question of population, but it is a question of territorial status. Once territories, commonwealths, and insular possessions become one with our great Nation, and Congress in its wisdom determines Americans living in those areas should be represented by a delegate, the history of our great Nation shows the number of constituents represented by each Delegate is irrelevant.

Mr. Speaker, now as to the matter of paying taxes. Contrary to what you may have heard or read in the media—and I will speak only for my district—my constituents do indeed pay taxes: income, employment, and Social Security taxes. Our income tax system is mirrored after the Internal Revenue Code.

And I would also note, Mr. Speaker, that in Mr. George F. Will's recent commentary pointing out for Samoan edification that there should be "no representation without taxation"—to the contrary, Mr. George F. Will, Samoans do pay taxes, exactly the way Congress wanted us to pay. And beyond that, Mr. George F. Will, Samoans also bleed and die in defense of this great Nation of ours.

Mr. Speaker, like some of my colleagues here today, I'm a Vietnam veteran and I submit I'm not one for making eloquent speeches. In passing the Vietnam Memorial each morning, however, I cannot help but remember the sacrifice of the many Samoans whose names are etched for eternity on that black slab of honor.

Although all 50 of the States and the territories have men serving in the Armed Services, my people on a per capita basis provide more men in the defense of our country's liberty than any other. Many Samoan soldiers have given the ultimate sacrifice, knowing they could not vote for their commander in Chief.

And how many times have I heard Gen. Ben Blaz, a former Republican delegate from the territory of Guam, say to this body on behalf of 4.6 million Americans: "We are equal in war, but not in peace."

I cannot more strongly ask for your support to allow our delegates to vote on the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING].

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I would like to preface my remarks by merely saying that to the best of my knowledge there are only three parties represented here. There is a Republican Party, a Democrat Party, and a Socialist Party, and I wish we would stop talking about a party that does not exist, which is a Democratic Party which I keep hearing people talk about, particularly when we are seeing the charade that is going on this afternoon. We should not be referring to the party as the Democratic Party. But I would like to talk about a different issue than has been discussed at the present time, and I would like to do that simply because the majority did in their rules give a little lipservice to the whole idea of congressional coverage.

The House has for too long either completely exempted itself from the laws it has imposed on the private sector, or extended coverage in some cases but effectively gutted that coverage through limiting enforcement to our own internal Office of Fair Employment Practices [OFEP] or simply through the issuance of internal guidelines which exempt most employees from coverage. While these actions may conveniently take the sting out of these laws, the result can hardly be called equitable to our employees and certainly cannot be described as bringing the House under the same laws as those imposed on the private sector. It's time for the facade to end.

Let me provide concrete examples. The Age Discrimination in Employment Act and the Occupational Safety and Health Act do not apply to the House. Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act and the Americans With Disabilities Act apply but enforcement is strictly through the OFEP, so no Member faces the potential lawsuits and jury trials, with massive punitive and compensatory damages, which now confront the private sector under these laws. Finally, let me just remind Members of the charade which took place when the Fair Labor Standards Act was extended to the House, with much fanfare, and House Administration later quietly issued interpretive guidelines exempting virtually all employees from overtime pay. Very convenient for the House but hardly fair.

The language in the proposed House rule addresses these issues by requiring that the relevant committees of jurisdiction examine a range of labor laws listed and report legislation by June 30, 1993, which would apply those laws to the House in the same or similar manner as those laws apply to the private sector, including enforcement procedures and damages. Certain nonlabor laws are also included, in which case the manner of application to the executive branch is the model to be followed.

I recognize that the enforcement requirements raise legitimate constitutional issues and hence the proposed language provides that these requirements need not be implemented if there exist manifest constitutional limitations. But these limitations must be absolutely clear, not simply questionable or falling within a gray area. In this regard I wish to emphasize that I believe that private lawsuits in court against Members would pass constitutional muster. Time prevents debate of that issue here but I will include for the RECORD an analysis by the Congressional Research Service which I requested which clearly supports this point of view; I recommend it to my colleagues in the majority for their reading.

Mr. Speaker, I realize there is a possibility this proposal will not pass today. But I will continue to pursue, with my Republican colleagues, the issue in every forum I can. Perhaps once the House subjects itself to the many laws it so readily imposes on others, we will see improved efforts in crafting those laws. As importantly, the public will see that we are actually serious about changing the way we do things around here.

CONGRESSIONAL RESEARCH SERVICE,
THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS,
Washington, DC, April 10, 1991.

To: Hon. WILLIAM F. GOODLING.
(Attention: Randy Johnson).
From: American Law Division.
Subject: Constitutionality of Authorizing Private Causes of Actions by Employees of Members of Congress Against Their Employers.

This memorandum is in response to your inquiry with regard to whether the speech or debate clause of the Constitution, or, perhaps, some other constitutional provision, would be violated should Congress, in providing protections to employees, either those working for individual Members and for congressional committees or those working for the institution, by forbidding discrimination of the basis of race, color, sex, religion, or other prescribed grounds, authorize the employees to sue in federal court for alleged discrimination.

Implicated directly by any such proposal would indeed be the speech or debate clause assurance that Members of Congress "shall not be questioned in any other Place" for things said or done in the legislative process. Article I, §6, cl. 1. Additionally, a general separation of powers issue might be raised. As we understand the likely proposal, it would not include any authority for the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, an executive branch agency, to police the employment relations of the legislative branch, which would in itself raise speech or debate and separation of powers questions.

This issue has occasioned much debate in Congress and out in recent years. It is not possible to make a definitive determination on the basis of the constitutional text and its history, structure, and purposes, and the judicial precedents are not dispositive. However, the text as informed by the interpretive judicial decisions does rather strongly suggest that the courts would sustain the validity of the enactment should Congress choose to take the step.

Although the following discussion is anchored in the judicial precedents, one must begin by acknowledging that it is the responsibility of each branch to make an independent interpretation of the meaning of the Constitution and that, while the decision in any particular instance may be reviewable by the courts, ultimately the Supreme Court, each branch owes to the others a respect for the reading of the Constitution developed in the course of governing. United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 703 (1974). Even, therefore, if the Supreme Court's decisions were more directly declaratory of the law than they in fact are, Congress in acting on any measure may proceed on a different understanding of the metes and bounds of the Constitution.

SPEECH OR DEBATE CLAUSE

The Speech or debate clause has a long lineage from the struggles of Parliament with the Crown in England, United States v. Johnson, 383 U.S. 169, 178 (1966), and in our scheme of things is designed to protect the independence and integrity of the legislature and to reinforce the principle of separation of powers. Ibid.; United States v. Brewster, 408 U.S. 501, 507 (1972). The protection of the clause is not limited to words spoken in debate. "Committee reports, resolutions, and the act of voting are equally covered, as are 'things generally done in a session of the House by one of its Members in relation to the business before it." Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486, 502 (1969) (quoting Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U.S. 168, 204 (1881)). Thus, so long as legislators are "acting in the sphere of legitimate legislative activity," they are "protected not only from the consequence of litigation's results but also from the burden of defending themselves." Tenney v. Brandhove, 341 U.S. 367, 376–377 (1972).

Not only is the Member protected when the clause applies, but his aides receive equal coverage. In Gravel v. United States, 408 U.S. 606, 616–617 (1972), the Court accepted the contentions urged on it by the Senate: "that it is literally impossible, in view of the complexities of the modern legislative process, with Congress almost constantly in session and matters of legislative concern constantly proliferating, for Members of Congress to perform their legislative tasks without the help of aides and assistants; that the day-to-day work of such aides is so critical to the Members' performance that they must be treated as the latters' alter ego; and that if they are not so recognized, the central role of the Speech or Debate Clause . . . will inevitably be diminished and frustrated." Therefore, the Court held "that the Speech or Debate Clause applies not only to a Member but also to his aides insofar as the conduct of the latter would be a protected legislative act if performed by the Member himself." Id., 618. See also Doe v. McMillan, 412 U.S. 306 (1973).

But the scope of the meaning of "legislative activity" has its limits. "The heart of the clause is speech or debate in either House, and insofar as the clause is construed to reach other matters, they must be an integral part of the deliberative and communicative processes by which Members participate in committee and House proceedings with respect to the consideration and passage or rejection of proposed legislation or with respect to other matters which the Constitution places within the jurisdiction of either House." Gravel, supra, 408 U.S., 625. Immunity from civil suit, both in law and equity, and from criminal action based on the performance of legislative duties flows from a determination that a challenged act is within the definition of legislative activity. Gravel, for example, held that a grand jury could validly inquire into the processes by which a Member obtained classified information and into the arrangements for subsequent private republication of these documents, since neither action involved protected conduct, id., 626, and republication by a Member of allegedly defamatory remarks outside the legislative body, here through newsletters and press releases, was held unprotected, because it was not essential to the legislative process. Hutchinson v. Proxmire, 441 U.S. 111 (1979). In Dov v. McMillian, supra, the Court held that Members and their aides were absolutely immune from liability for conducting an investigation and preparing a report, allegedly libelous, but that the Public Printer and the Superintendent of Documents could be held liable for distributing the report to the public beyond the channels of communication within Congress. Id., 412 U.S., 320–324.

Thus, a Member is immune when he is "acting in the sphere of legitimate legislative activity." Tenney v. Brandhove, supra, 341 U.S., 376–377. His aides and presumably others acting at his direction are immune when he is. But when he acts outside the legislative sphere, he is not immune and neither are his aides or others directed by him. Doe v. McMillian, supra, 315–316.

Are employment decisions immunized by the speech or debate clause?

It has been strongly contended that the employment decisions of Members with respect to their aides, at least with respect to those aides who are essential to the performance of those legislative activities that are protected by the clause, fall fully within the protection of the speech or debate clause and "shall not be questioned in any other Place." As we will see, that position has support in the case law, but a recent decision by the Supreme Court suggests the conclusion that a Member's hiring and firing practices are not legislative within the meaning of the clause.

In Davis v. Passman, 442 U.S. 228 (1979), a divided Court held that a female aide of a Member, discharged because the Member preferred a male for the job, had a cause of action under the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment to sue the Member for monetary damages.[1] Because the lower court had not passed on the contention that the speech or debate clause precluded the suit, the Supreme Court declined to do so at that stage. Id., 235–236n. 11. The Court did hold that, inasmuch as the clause embodied for Members of Congress the concerns of the separation of powers doctrine for purposes of immunity from suit, it was the only source of immunity, not other principles of separation as well. Ibid. Chief Justice Burger, dissenting along with Justices Powell and Rehnquist, argued that separation of powers in combination with the speech or debate clause, both sharing common roots, did not permit the suit to go forward, id., 249, and Justice Stewart, dissenting, thought the speech or debate clause issue was "far from frivolous" and would have remanded so the court of appeals could decide it. Id., 251.[2]

[1] In Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of the Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388 (1971), the Court held that a person, alleging violation of his Fourth Amendment search and seizure protection, in the absence of a statutory remedial cause of action, could sue the individual officers for damages under an implied cause of action premised directly upon the constitutional provision in question. Davis v. Passman extended this ruling, by basing the implication of a cause of action upon the Fifth Amendment's due process clause, which contains an equal protection component, when the Federal Government or someone acting under its authority performs an allegedly discriminatory act.

In two decisions, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit attempted to formulate a standard to permit determination of applicability or nonapplicability of the clause to congressional employment decisions. The discharge of the manager of the House of Representatives' restaurants was the issue in Walker v. Jones, 722 F.2d 923 (D.C.Cir.) cert. den., 469 U.S. 1036 (1984). Essentially, the court thought inquiry should focus on whether an employee's duties could be viewed "as work that significantly informs of influences the shaping of our nation's laws" or whether an employee's duties were "peculiar to a Congress member's work qua legislator," "intimately cognate. . . to the legislative process." Id., 931. Under that standard, the clause did not apply to the employee. In Browning v. Clerk, U.S. House of Representatives, 789 F.2d 923 (D.C.Cir.), cert. den., 479 U.S. 996 (1986), the discharge of an Official Reporter for the House of Representatives was challenged. The court held the congressional defendants to be immune under the speech or debate clause. The standard was "whether the employee's duties were directly related to the due functioning of the legislative process." Id., 929 (emphasis in original). If the employee's duties are "such that they are directly assisting members of Congress in the 'discharge of their functions,' personnel decisions affecting them are correspondingly legislative and shielded from judicial scrutiny." Ibid.

Requiring reconsideration of this developing case law, however, is Forrester v. White, 484 U.S. 219 (1988). The case unanimously held that a state court judge did not have judicial immunity in a suit for damages brought by a probation officer whom he had fired. The Court explained that in determining whether immunity attaches to a particular official action it applies a "functional" approach. "Under that approach, we examine the nature of the functions with which a particular official or class of officials has been lawfully entrusted, and we seek to evaluate the effect that exposure to particular forms of liability would likely have on the appropriate exercise of those functions. Officials who seek exemption from personal liability have the burden of showing that such an exemption is justified by overriding considerations of public policy. . ." Id., 224. Thus, it is "the nature of the function performed, not the identity of the actor who performed it, inform[s] our immunity analysis." Id., 229.

Judges have absolute immunity from liability for the performance of judicial functions. Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall. (80 U.S.) 335 (1872); Pierson v. Ray, 386 U.S. 547 (1967); Stump v. Sparkman, 435 U.S. 349 (1978). But when a judge acts in an administrative or a legislative capacity, he enjoys no judicial immunity. In the Court's view, "Judge White was acting in an administrative capacity when he demoted and discharged Forrester. Those acts. . . may have been quite important in providing the necessary conditions of a sound adjudicative system. The decisions at issue, however, were not themselves judicial or adjudicative." Supra, 484 U.S., 229. Employment decisions, like many others, the Court continued, "are often crucial to the efficient operation of public institutions," ibid., yet they are not entitled to absolute immunity, "even though they may be essential to the very functioning of the courts. . . ." Id., 228.

Forrester v. White was, of course, not a case governed by the speech or debate clause; it was brought under 42 U.S.C. §1983, which affords persons who have been denied their constitutional rights under color of state law a cause of action against state and local defendants. And, yet, the Court has, when passing on questions of legislative immunity in §1983 actions, looked to speech and debate principles, emphasizing that the clause itself is but a part of the much larger common-law principle of legislative freedom of speech. Tenney v. Brandhove, supra, 341 U.S., 372–379; Supreme Court of Virginia v. Consumers Union, 446 U.S. 719, 732 (1980). Indeed, the Court has said that "we generally have equated the legislative immunity to which state legislators are entitled under §1983 to that accorded Congressmen under the Constitution." Id., 733. See also Eastland v. United States Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491, 502–503, 505, 506 (1975); Dombrowski v. Eastland, 387 U.S. 82, 84–85; United States v. Johnson, supra, 383 U.S., 180. If, therefore, Forrester v. White bears on the question of congressional immunity for employment decisions, it strongly suggests that for such decisions Members of Congress do not have immunity.

The D.C. Circuit in Gross v. Winter, 876 F.2d 165 (D.C.Cir. 1989), has read Forrester to apply to legislative immunity and has held that a legislator's employment decisions are not entitled to legislative immunity. Gross, too, is a §1983 case brought against a member of the City Council of the District of Columbia, but the court took the two previous decisions in the Circuit, Walker and Browning, to have stated the doctrinal standards, which must be modified in the light of Forrester. See also Rateree v. Rockett, 852 F.2d 946, 950 (7th Cir. 1988)(dictum). The Gross court, however, reserved the question "whether special considerations applicable to members of Congress, such as separation-of-powers concerns, continue to justify the absolute immunity standard for congressional personnel decisions adopted in Browning." Supra, 876 F.2d, 172.

Ambiguity on this point clouds any analysis of Forrester. The Court observes at one point that it follows its "functional" approach in all cases, save for those that are governed "by express constitutional or statutory enactment." Forrester v. White, supra, 484 U.S., 224. Paramount of the express constitutional provisions, it then notes, is the legislative immunity created by the speech or debate clause. "Even here, however, the Court has been careful not to extend the scope of the protection further than its purposes require." Ibid. The Court then refers to Davis v. Passman, supra, for its holding that except for speech or debate clause immunity, a Member of Congress may be liable for his employment decisions. Ibid. But when, later in the opinion, the Court observed that, no less than a judge's ability to hire and fire employees as bearing on his ability to carry out his judicial functions is the similar ability of executive branch officials to hire and fire, and executive officials have not such immunity as the judge was claiming, the Court made no reference at all to employment decisions by legislators. Id., 229.

Some conflicting lines of precedent thus exist. Staffs of Members are so essential to the functioning of the legislative process that under Gravel they are entitled to the same speech or debate immunity that the Members have. This suggests that the clause could very well protect the Members' discretion in choosing to hire or to keep or not keep any person they want on their staffs. At the same time, the Forrester decision forecloses this mode of analysis for judges (as well as those executive officers with some measure of immunity). It is simply not relevant that the employee or aide is essential to the execution of the official's function or crucial to the efficient operation of his office. What is relevant is whether the function for which the judge is being questioned is judicial or adjudicative; if it is administrative, or legislative, judicial immunity does not attach.

Legislative immunity could be similarly analyzed. When the Member is engaged in legislative activity, he and his assisting aides are entitled to speech or debate immunity; when the Member, or an aide deputized by him, is engaged in an administrative function, such as hiring or firing staff, neither has speech or debate immunity. The conceptual difficulty is that in being "careful not to extend the scope of the protection [of the speech or debate clause] further than its purposes require," Forrester, 484 U.S., 224, the Court has construed the application of the clause to depend upon the connection of the acts challenged to the legislative process. In the context of Gravel, the "purposes" served by the clause required coverage of aides. But hiring and firing an aide is not legislating, anymore than discharging the probation officer was a judicial act of Judge White. A tension exists here, but on the strength of Forrester, a persuasive argument can be made that the speech or debate clause does not encompass employment decisions.

In any event, certain employees of the institution, such as the manager of the House of Representatives restaurant involved in Walker v. Jones, supra, have only a tenuous relationship to the legislative function. Under the precedents preceding Forrester, it appears that Congress could have provided a judicial remedy for them. Similarly, not all personal aides of Members assist in the legislative function as explicated by the Court. Some deal with constituent relations; some do casework and other activities with the executive branch and the like. Even if, therefore, employment decisions concerning aides assisting the Member exclusively in the legislative function were immune, the same decisions with respect to other employees would not be. Difficulties of application, it is safe to say, would be great.

Certainly, an express decision made legislatively by Congress that employment decisions of Members can be placed outside coverage of the speech or debate clause would be a determination by the body most familiar with the issue that should be entitled to special deference by the courts when they are called upon to pass on the question of the validity of congressional coverage under an appropriate statute.

[2] The case was settled after the Supreme Court remanded it for further proceedings, and no speech or debate clause resolution was reached.

May Congress waive speech or debate immunity from suit?

Even if it is eventually determined, either by Congress or by the courts, that employment decisions are encompassed by the clause, the validity of judicial cognizance of questions arising from the relationship could still be defended on the basis that Congress may waive the protection of the clause by an express provision of law and given jurisdiction of an issue to the courts. Absent clearly applicable case law, we can, at this point, but speculate about how the Supreme Court might eventually resolve the question.

Twice now, the Court has reserved the issue, in the context of criminal prosecutions of Members. "[W]ithout intimating any view thereon, we expressly leave open for consideration when the case arises a prosecution which . . . is founded upon a narrowly drawn statute passed by Congress in the exercise of its legislative power to regulate the conduct of its members." Johnson, supra, 383 U.S., 185. See also Brewster, supra, 408 U.S., 529 n. 18. But in the latter case, three dissenters reached the issue and would have ruled that Congress may not authorize the courts to try Members for conduct protected by the speech or debate clause. Id., 529, 540–549 (Justices Brennan and Douglas), 551, 562–563 (Justices White, Brennan, and Douglas). Both Johnson and Brewster were criminal cases, the paradigmatic kind of executive invasion of legislative privilege with which the parliamentary proponents of legislative integrity and the Framers were concerned. It may be that with respect to civil cases, especially civil cases in which the plaintiff is a private citizen, the concern is of a lesser nature, see Gross v. Winter, supra, 876 F.2d, 172–173 n. 11, but the clause clearly applies to both criminal and civil suits, and the Court, with one exception not relevant in this context, has indicated no difference of treatment based on the nature of the cause of action. See Supreme Court of Virginia, supra, 446 U.S., 733 (noting United States v. Gillock, 445 U.S. 360 (1980)).

Facially, the clause seems to make jurisdiction over Members for conduct covered by the clause exclusive with the respective House of each Member. That is, "for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place." That exclusivity is the necessary conclusion from the plain language of the clause is hardly compelling. It merits mention that Congress is given by the Constitution, Article I, §5, cl 2 the power to punish its Members for disorderly behavior and even to expel a Member by a two-thirds vote of the respective House. This power to punish is a complementary authority to speech or debate immunity, inasmuch as the drive of the English Parliament for legislative freedom included the successful assertion of the power to punish members for offenses for which they were immune to executive prosecution. Colonial and state legislatures in this country and the Federal Congress all claimed the same power as part of the same consideration. See Anderson v. Dunn, 6 Wheat. (19 U.S.) 204 (1821); Watkins v. United States, 354 U.S. 178, 188–199 (1957); United States v. Brown, 381 U.S. 437, 441–446 (1965); Powell v. McCormack, supra, 395 U.S., 552–548. As the Court has observed, Congress' power to punish Members, even to expulsion, is quite broad, extending "to all cases where the offence is such as in the judgment of the Senate [and, no doubt, the House of Representatives] is inconsistent with the trust and duty of a member." In re Chapman, 166 U.S. 661, 669–670 (1897). In exercising its powers under this grant of authority, the Senate or the House of Representatives "acts as a judicial tribunal" and its powers to adjudge "is in no wise inferior under like circumstances to that exercised by a court of justice." Barry v. United States ex rel. Cunningham, 279 U.S. 597, 616 (1929).

In Burton v. United States, 202 U.S. 344 (1906), a Senator convicted for accepting money to influence an executive department, conduct not protected by the speech or debate clause, argued that the statute under which he was charged conflicted with the provision of Article I, §5, cls. 1 & 2, making each House the sole judge of the qualifications of its Members and giving each House the authority to punish its Members for disorderly behavior. Cf. Kilbourn v. Thompson, supra, 103 U.S., 183 (The Constitution "is not wholly silent as to the authority of the separate branches of Congress to inflict punishment. It authorizes each House to punish its own members.") (emphasis added). Rejecting the contention, the Court observed: "While the framers of the Constitution intended that each Department should keep within its appointed sphere of public action, it was never contemplated that the authority of the Senate to admit to a seat in its body one who had been duly elected as a Senator, or its power to expel him after being admitted, should, in any degree, limit or restrict the authority of Congress to enact such statutes, not forbidden by the Constitution, as the public interests required for carrying into effect the powers granted to it. In order to promote the efficiency of the public service and enforce integrity in the conduct of such public affairs as are committed to the several Departments, Congress, having a choice of means, may prescribe such regulations to those ends as its wisdom may suggest, if they be not forbidden by the fundamental law." Id., 202 U.S., 367. That is, Congress, though the Senate had the power to punish the member itself, could enact legislation providing for his trial in the courts of the United States.

Similarly, though each House has the power, pursuant to the legislative power of inquiry, to punish contempts by witnesses before it or one of its committees, Anderson v. Dunn, supra; Marshall v. Gordon, 243 U.S. 521 (1917); McGrain v. Daugherty, 273 U.S. 135 (1927); Jurney v. MacCracken, 294 U.S. 125 (1935), it may also provide for trial and punishment before the federal courts. In 1857, because imprisonment could extend no further than the adjournment of the House which ordered it and because contempt trials before the bar of the charging House were time consuming, Congress enacted a statute providing for criminal process in the federal courts with prescribed penalties for contempt of Congress. Act of January 24, 1857, 11 Stat. 155. With only minor modifications, this statute is now 2 U.S.C. §192.

Holding that the purpose of this statute is merely supplementary of the power retained by Congress, the Supreme Court has rejected all constitutional challenges to it. "We grant that Congress could not divest itself, or either of its Houses, of the essential and inherent power to punish for contempt, in cases to which the power of either House properly extended; but because Congress, by the Act of 1857, sought to aid each of the Houses in the discharge of its constitutional functions, it does not follow that any delegation of the power in each to punish for contempt was involved." In re Chapman, supra, 166 U.S., 671–672.

The lesson of these cases is that Congress' power under Article I, §8, cl. 18, to enact all laws which are "necessary and proper" to execute its powers, includes the power to enact laws which implement and execute the powers of each House to govern itself. Congress regularly, pursuant to its authority to "determine the Rules of its Proceedings," enacts legislation binding both Houses to observance of procedural and substantive matters. The Legislative Reorganization Acts of 1946 and 1970, 60 Stat. 834, 84 Stat. 1175, contained extensive provisions affecting one House or the other as well as both bodies, and the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended, 99 Stat. 1037, made similar extensive provisions. Of course, each House retained the power to make unilateral changes, pursuant to the authorization to determine the rules of proceedings, but as to the power to enact legislation for both Houses there was no doubt.

Establishing that there is no necessary exclusivity simply because the Constitution imposes a power or duty on Congress, or on one House, thereof, merely addresses one half of the equation, however. The provisions discussed above involved delegations or authorizations to each House, whereas the speech or debate clause appears on its face to be directed to the protection of the individual Senator or Representative. It has been observed by the Court that "[t]he immunities of the Speech or Debate Clause were not written into the Constitution simply for the personal or private benefit of Members of Congress, but to protect the integrity of the legislative process by insuring the independence of individual legislators." United States v. Brewster, supra, 408 U.S., 507. See also Kilbourn v. Thompson, supra, 103 U.S., 203.

Practice by the House of Representatives considers the response of a Member to a subpoena or other legal process to raise a question related to the dignity of the House and the integrity of its proceedings. "The rules and precedents of the House require that no Member, official, staff member, or employee of the House may, either voluntarily or in obedience to a subpoena, testify regarding official functions, documents, or activities of the House without the consent of the House being first obtained." 3 DESCHLER'S PRECEDENTS of the UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, H. Doc. 94-661 (1979), ch. 11, §14. See In re Grand Jury Investigation (Eilberg), 587 F.2d 589, 592–593 (3d Cir. 1978) (House acquiescence to grand jury subpoena). This practice reflects the institutional interest of the House in the protection of the clause and might, without more, support enactment of legislation based on Congress' necessary and proper power.

Personal interest, a purely individual interest divorced from the institutional interest, in the protection of the clause has also been recognized, though. In Coffin v. Coffin, 4 Mass. 1, 27 (1808), speaking of the Massachusetts equivalent of the federal clause, Chief Justice Parsons said: "In considering this article, it appears to me that the privilege secured by it is not so much the privilege of the house as an organized body, as of each individual member composing it, who is entitled to this privilege, even against the declared will of the house. For he does not hold this privilege at the pleasure of the house; but derives it from the will of the people, expressed in the constitution, which is paramount to the will of either or both branches of the legislature. In this respect the privilege here secured resembles other privileges attached to each member by another part of the constitution, by which he is exempted from arrests on mesne (or original) process, during his going to, returning from, or attending the general court. Of these privileges, thus secured to each member, he cannot be deprived, by a resolve of the house, or by an act of the legislature." The significance of this particular case is that the Supreme Court has pronounced it to be perhaps "the most authoritative case in this country on the construction of the provision in regard to freedom of debate in legislative bodies . . . ." Kilbourn v. Thompson, supra, 103 U.S., 204. See also Tenney v. Brandhove, supra, 341 U.S., 373–374; United States v. Brewster, supra, 408 U.S., 513–517. While the Court has quoted these lines in a case only tangentially, if that, relevant to the question, Spallone v. United States, 100 S.Ct. 625, 634 (1990), its explanation of the reasons underlining the clause gives weight to the personal protection accorded individual Members as well as to the institutional interest. Brewster, supra. 408 U.S., 501; Tenney v. Brandhove, supra, 341 U.S., 372–373.

To be sure, there were instances in English history in which Parliament contrived to deny the protection of the privilege to Members. For example, John Wilkes was denied his parliamentary privilege and thereafter convicted in court for seditious libel, Powell v. McCormack, supra, 395 U.S., 527–531, but this case was such a cause celebre, here as well as in England, that adoption of its particular approach silently into the speech or debate clause in unlikely, to say the least.

It thus must be concluded that the power of Congress to waive the clause by expressly making Members subject to judicial process for covered conduct is unsettled. It is not, however, foreclosed as a possibility, inasmuch as the exclusivity argument has not been accepted in other contexts involving Article I, §§5 and 6. But the function of the clause as a protection of institutional interests through a protection of the individual legislators personal rights does weigh considerably against the possibility of institutional waiver. If Congress should enact a statue, making the determination that it can waive, again the fact that the body for whom the protections of the clause were intended has reasoned that its institutional interests would not be adversely affected by judicial exercise of the power would doubtlessly be given substantial deference by the courts. That the clause protects the individual interests of each Member, even though in the long run the protection is to further the institutional interest of the legislative body, would perhaps require some balancing by the courts. Acceptance of such a statute would appear, however, at this stage, to be problematic.

One should note, however, that when the employment decision is that of either the House of Representatives or the Senate, as an institution, as in the employment of restaurant workers, elevator operations, and the like, or even of employees more closely associated with the legislative process, such as the Official Reporter before the court in Browning, the ability to waive immunity against the institution might be more easily answered.

SEPARATION OF POWERS

Additionally, a general separation of powers issue may be independently raised. It is true that in Davis v. Passman, supra, 442 U.S., 228–229 n. 11, the Court stated that unless the speech or debate clause protected Members, they were not protected generally by the separation of powers doctrine. The Gross v. Winter court did, however, pause to consider whether an absolute immunity for Members making employment decisions might be justified under the doctrine of separation of powers, regardless of the inapplicability of the speech or debate clause. Supra, 876 F.2d, 172.

Briefly, the Court has adopted in its separation of powers decision-making a standard that evaluates whether there is encroachment and aggrandizement. That is, does the action of one branch toward another threaten to "impermissibly undermine" the powers of the other or threaten to "disrupt the proper balance between the coordinate branches [by] prevent[ing] the [branch acted upon] from accomplishing its constitutionally assigned functions." Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 693–696 (1988); Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361, 380–384 (1989). See also United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 713 (1974); Nixon v. Administrator of General Services, 433 U.S. 425, 442–443 (1977). Without intending to treat the issue superficially, we must observe that Congress has given the federal courts cognizance of employment discrimination in the executive branch of the Federal Government, and much litigation has ensued without suggestions that this extension of employment discrimination law has upset the balance of the separation of powers. Therefore, by parity of concern, it would seem evident that if the speech or debate clause is no impediment to judicial causes of action for the employees of congressional Members, the doctrine of separation of powers will present no barrier.

CONGRESSIONAL INSTRUMENTALITIES

Whether a constitutional problem would arise from application of employment discrimination laws, with judicial remedies, to the instrumentalities of Congress[3] is a question that may be quickly disposed of. In the course of its legislative provision of remedies against employment discrimination, beginning in 1972, Congress has extended to the Library of Congress and to those units in the legislative branch which have positions in the competitive service the guarantees and judicial remedies of title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (as amended in 1972), 42 U.S.C. §2000e–16(b), and the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 (as amended in 1978), 29 U.S.C. §633a(a). The General Accounting Office, which is a legislative branch agency for some purposes and an executive branch agency for others,[4] is covered by these two Acts and by the Rehabilitation Act of 1973.[5] However, the Americans With Disabilities Act of July 26, 1990, P.L. 101–336, §509(c), 104 Stat. 375, in applying the Act to these instrumentalities, provided for administrative enforcement by the agencies only.[6]

To be sure, some employees of some of these agencies in working with Members and the staffs of Members certainly participate in the legislative process in the sense of the term that the Supreme Court has used in interpreting the speech or debate clause. Employees of the Congressional Research Service of the Library of Congress and of the Congressional Budget Office do so participate, and there is authority that for actions CRS employees, for instance, take in the performance of the legislative function they are immune under the speech or debate clause. See Webster v. Sun Co., Inc., 561 F.Supp. 1184 (D.D.C. 1983), vacated and remanded, 731 F.2d 1 (D.C.Cir. 1984), on further appeal, 709 F.2d 157 (D.C.Cir. 1986). Other members of the Library of Congress staff perform other functions not related to the legislative process. See, e.g., Eltra Corp. v. Ringer, 579 F.2d 294, 298–301 (4th Cir. 1978) (position of Register of Copyrights). Similarly, it is questionable that, for instance, employees of the United States Botanic Garden participate in the legislative function as defined by the Supreme Court.

If Congress should adopt the reasoning of an earlier portion of the memorandum to the effect that employment decisions are administrative functions not so inextricably tied to the legislative function as to implicate the speech or debate clause, the issue is easily settled. But even if the personal staffs of Members, or at least the legislative affairs employees of the Members' personal staffs, are determined to be covered by the speech or debate clause that they may not be authorized to seek judicial relief for proscribed practices, it does not follow that the employees of congressional instrumentalities are likewise covered. Those who do not assist Members in the carrying out of their legislative responsibilities would seem clearly to be outside the scope of the clause. Those who do assist Members in the carrying out of their legislative responsibilities may well be immune for their actions while so assisting, but what is the legislative function of the employment decisions of the agencies who hire, fire, and oversee their employment that gives those decisions legislative immunity?

A more compelling reason exists for doubting that the clause would require that employees of these agencies be remitted to purely administrative remedies. The speech or debate clause provides that for their performance of their legislative functions the Members of Congress are not to be questioned in any other place. A challenge to an agency decision respecting the employment rights of an employee would be a suit against the agency. The Library of Congress or the Government Printing Office would be sued, not a Member or Members, not the House of Representatives or the Senate. There is no facile attempt at word play in this distinction.

Thus, in Kilbourn v. Thompson, supra, although Congress could not be sued for ordering the arrest of Kilbourn, nor could any Member be sued for voting for the resolution, the Sergeant at Arms who carried out the legislative directive to take Kilbourn into custody was suable and liable. In Doe v. McMillian, supra, neither the Members nor the committee staff who carried out the investigation and the subsequent preparation and publication of the report on the investigation could be sued, but the two officers, the Public Printer and the Superintendent of Documents, who carried out the congressional directive to distribute the report outside Congress were suable. In Powell v. McCormack, supra, 395 U.S., 503–506, the Court held that it was proper to name several officers and employees of the House of Representatives as defendants in order that the action of the House in excluding the Member-elect could be challenged.

That Members of Congress are immune for the act of voting for a measure that may be unconstitutional does not mean that the enacted measure may not be challenged in court, such as by suing one charged with its enforcement for a declaration of invalidity. Congressional actions may be challenged, even if the congressional actors may not be. See, e.g., Powell v. McCormack, supra. Thus, it would seem to follow that the actions of a legislative agency proceeding under general congressional direction could be challenged without implicating the strictures of the speech or debate clause. At the least, with the existence of an enacted policy against employment discrimination, the employing agency would, at the least, be acting ultra vires were it to make decisions on the prohibited grounds.

[3] For purposes of this memorandum, the instrumentalities of Congress include the Architect of the Capitol, the Congressional Budget Office, the General Accounting Office, the Government Printing Office, the Library of Congress, the Office of Technology Assessment, and the United States Botanic Garden. Americans With Disabilities Act of July 26, 1990, P.L. 101–336, §509(c)(4), 104 Stat. 375.

[4] See Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714 (1986).

[5] These Acts apply to "executive agencies" as defined in 5 U.S.C. §105, which specifies that, for purposes of title 5, "executive agency" includes an "independent establishment," which in turn is defined by 5 U.S.C. §104(2) to include GAO.

[6] The proposed Civil Rights Act of 1990, S. 2104, §16(c), 101st Congress, would have limited enforcement of the Act and of Title VII to administrative enforcement within each agency.

CONCLUSION

First, application to Congress of the employment protection provisions of federal civil rights laws, at least in the context of authorizing judicial remedies, could raise problems under the speech or debate clause. Under one possible analysis, some employees would be sufficiently removed from the legislative process so that decisions about them may well not implicate the clause at all, whereas other employees are so integral to the legislative process that their employment would be covered. But if the Supreme Court's Forrester decision provides the appropriate mode of analysis, an employment decision of a Member with respect to all staff would be an administrative decision not entitled to speech or debate clause protection. Especially if Congress should conclude that Forrester is the correct analysis, in the course of extending the laws, it seems likely that the courts may well defer to that determination.

Second, if it is concluded that the speech or debate clause applies to the employment decisions of Members, an argument exists that Congress may expressly waive the protection and subject Members to suit. Little actual authority exists for the proposition, but there is little on the other side either. The matter is largely one of deductions from basic principles and analogies. But the argument from general principles in favor of waiver is significantly weaker than the argument that the clause does not apply in the first place.

Third, it would appear that regardless of the conclusion with respect to the personal staffs of Members, the employees of a number of agencies associated with Congress would be sufficiently removed from the legislative process that the clause would not apply. With respect to other such employees, who are more involved in the legislative process, the fact that the employment decisions are made by the agencies themselves and not by Congress or an individual Member could bring the decisions outside the scope of the clause.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how much time is remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. EDWARDS of California). The gentlewoman from New York [Ms. SLAUGHTER] has 18½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] has 19½ minutes remaining.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Puerto Rico [Mr. ROMERO-BARCELÓ].

Mr. ROMERO-BARCELÓ. Mr. Speaker, when I studied American history in high school I was taught that the poll tax was repealed and that there was a principle called no taxation without representation. But I never heard that there was such a thing as no representation without taxation.

Mr. Speaker, I have heard here today some distinguished Members say that we should not be allowed to vote because we do not pay taxes. Well, Puerto Rico does not pass upon Federal taxes. It is the Congress that determines whether we pay taxes or not. So it has been Congress' determination, not ours.

Now, we have also been U.S. citizens for 76 years, and we are disenfranchised U.S. citizens. Each one of you here represents approximately 600,000 U.S. citizens. I represent 3,600,000 U.S. citizens.

When I left at Christmas to go home I was very excited and very happy about the fact that well, we got a little bit more. We are going to be able to at least vote in the Committee of the Whole, even though we cannot vote on the floor. The people in Puerto Rico were all delighted and excited.

Now I come back and this is no longer even a vote. We call it a vote, but it is not a vote. All we are being allowed is to participate further upon the debate. Because the vote that we carry out, if it is a vote that determines the outcome, then it is no longer valid. We take it back. So that is not a vote, it is just an opportunity to participate.

To hear each one of you, if I were to ask each Member do you believe in equality, you would say yes, you believe in equality. You would be offended by the question. But here you are denying us even the opportunity to participate on behalf of 3,600,000 disenfranchised U.S. citizens further along in the debate.

All it is going to do is you debate it, you decide it, and then, if our vote is determining, then you take it back and you continue with the process.

Mr. Speaker, I would hope the Members would reconsider their position.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM].

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I am as distressed as some others here today by the content of the rules, the rolling quorum, and a number of other things that are proposed out here, and I am discomforted by the thought of enfranchising with a vote on the floor of the House the Delegates from the various territories and the District of Columbia for the reasons I have heard some of my colleagues say. I do not think it is constitutional and I think we are just going to get into a brouhaha here that ultimately will wind up being decided by the courts if that be the case.

But I would like to use a couple of minutes to talk about something that is not in these rules that should be, something that our minority leader in a motion in a few minutes is going to propose that be put into these rules, and that is a limitation on the term or length of time or number of years that a person may serve as the chairman of a committee, a major committee or a minor committee or any other committee of this Congress.

We had a few minutes ago a press conference dealing with a bill that was introduced today with 75 cosponsors to limit the terms of Congressmen, for a constitutional amendment to limit the terms of Congressmen.

That is by far the largest number ever to sponsor such an amendment in this body. I think 31 was the largest number on any proposal up to this point in time in history.

Forty-two of those cosponsors are freshmen. I think that is reflective of the overwhelming sentiment of the public, which in the polls are around 70 to 80 percent constant there of all political persuasions who favor limiting terms of Congressmen.

Why do they favor that? They favor it because they see problems with this institution that we cannot correct by simply taking a pair of scissors and trimming around the edges. We need major reform of how this institution operates.

One of the reasons why term limits for Congressmen is so strongly supported is because it would get at the very same thing in part that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] would do, and that is to limit the power that individuals have who stay here for 20 and 30 more years. The power to sit as a chairman of a committee is the power to bottle up legislation, the power to dictate, the power to influence amendments. And that is with all due respect to a lot of my good friends and colleagues who have served in that capacity and still will serve admirably and under whom I have served.

But it is a problem with this institution that the public recognizes, that needs to be reined in, and we will have an opportunity in a few minutes to do it.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the vote on the motion if it comes to recommit to limit the terms of our chairmen to no more than 6 years or three consecutive terms.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, in World War II the territories contributed 1 out of every 300 casualties. They contributed 809 casualties in the Korean war. Of Vietnam veterans killed in action, Guam had a casualty rate higher than any State except Alaska. I do not recall those Republicans and Democrats voting for Desert Storm saying that because they do not have representation in Congress like all of us, we should exclude Guamanians, Puerto Ricans, Samoans, and Virgin Islanders from serving in the gulf.

Mr. Speaker, this is a compromise. If I were a Delegate, and some Delegates have, I would express disappointment that they are only getting half a loaf.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] mentioned the constitutional amendment to balance the budget and the constitutional amendment on flag burning. If it were a close vote on these issues, the votes of the Delegates would be canceled. There is a procedure in this compromise that basically says on close votes we are talking about retaking the vote. That is a bit of disenfranchisement.

On the tax issue, insular areas pay taxes. They revert back to the territories.

On the issue of partisanship, I have letters to the minority leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL], from the minority Republican leaders of the Guam Legislature and the Governor saying this is not a partisan issue. This is important to the people of Guam.

Mr. Speaker, we are talking about 4.5 million Americans that do not have a voice or a vote. They have dedicated Delegates that vote in committee, but when it comes time to vote on the floor and to participate, they are not equal to the rest of the country.

☐ 1540

Mr. Speaker, the time has come to redress the wrong and to vote for full participation for all Americans in the proceedings of the U.S. Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I include for the RECORD further points which I wish to make on this issue.

The one Resident Commissioner and four Delegates in the House of Representatives are the sole congressional representatives of some 4.5 million Americans.

These Americans have no representation whatsoever in the U.S. Senate, and their Delegates—and our colleagues—are unable to vote in the House of Representatives.

Instead, they must watch from the sidelines as the rest of us vote on legislation that has a lasting effect on the lives of those these Delegates were elected to represent.

During the historic debate on the gulf war, for example, Delegates were denied the right to vote although they knew that their constituents were going to be dispatched without delay to face Iraq's Scud missiles, mustard gas, and give their lives if necessary.

This both the Delegates and their constituents accepted in a spirit of patriotism, just as they have in a string of United States military conflicts from Panama to Vietnam, and from Lebanon to Korea.

These four Delegates and one Resident Commissioner with whom we have worked so closely and so well at the committee level, should be given the vote in the Committee of the Whole.

This would:

First, violate no constitutional precepts;

Second, be entirely within the jurisdiction of the House rules, and therefore can be adopted by a simple vote of the House; and

Third, give these five colleagues a greater degree of participation in the formulation of the laws that affect the lives of those who sent them here.

TWENTY-FIRST GUAM LEGISLATURE,
Agana, Guam, December 28, 1992.
Hon. ROBERT H. MICHEL,
Minority Leader of the House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MICHEL: Very reliable information has reached our shores that the U.S. House of Representatives may be presented with an amendment to its 103rd Congressional House Rules that would give the heretofore non-voting delegates of our four (4) U.S. insular areas (the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, Puerto Rico and Guam) and of the District of Columbia, the right to vote in the Committee of the Whole. Naturally such a move would give our opposition party (the Democrats) an advantage of five (5) additional votes, since all the above-noted delegates are Democrats.

As the Minority Leader of the Republican Party for our own incoming 22nd Guam Legislature, I share a vicarious chagrin at the prospect of giving this added advantage to the Opposition. However, inasmuch as the proposed amendment addresses a very progressive move for our own Guam delegate to Congress (Democrat though he may be), which is very much in line with our Territorial quest for a stronger voice in Congress, I am compelled to put partisan consideration aside in favor of supporting such an amendment, and I humbly solicit and encourage your support as well. It is my sincere hope that the Republican Minority in the 103rd Congress will not find such a move politically unsupportable.

Despite the fact that the Democrats hold a 435–258 (25%) edge over the Republicans, and hence opposition to an additional five (5) votes is at best a token one. I am confident that the Republican congressmen and congresswomen in the 103rd Congress will be more than a token check-and-balance in the system. We here in the Territory laud the move to grant our non-voting delegates their long-deserved right to cast their votes. It is yet another step toward recognizing our delegates as full-fledged members of the U.S. Congress. It appears they already enjoy most other congressional privileges (committee membership, sub-committee chairmanship, mailing privileges, flanking privileges, protocol, seniority, etc.). Certainly, why not the most precious of privileges—the right to cast their votes.

On behalf of the Republican Minority of the 22nd Guam Legislature, therefore, I wish to register our joint support to the amendment. We hope that you can understand, appreciate and support our position.

Sincerely,
ANTONIO R. UNPINGCO.

TERRITORY OF GUAM,
Agana, Guam, December 29, 1992.
Hon. ROBERT H. MICHEL,
House Minority Leader, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MICHEL: As the House convenes for the 103rd Congress, a historic measure to grant the territorial delegates the opportunity to vote in the Committee of the Whole will be discussed. The people of Guam look forward to this procedural right being extended to our delegate. We do not see this as a partisan issue, but rather, as a means for Guam's agenda to be more widely understood and appreciated by all Members of the Congress.

As you are aware, Guam makes a significant contribution to the national interest through the extensive holding of Guam property for national defense purposes. Moreover, we pay taxes as prescribed by federal law and have made tremendous progress in fostering economic self-sufficiency. We seek to continue our development for self-sufficiency as well as balancing federal interests with our quest for self-government and self-determination through Commonwealth status. The opportunity for our delegate to vote in the Committee of the Whole will no doubt be good for Guam as well as the nation in the consideration of policy that affects all Americans.

Thank you for your attention to this matter. I remain, Sir,

Sincerely yours,
JOSEPH F. ADA,
Governor.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON], yes, it is half a loaf. And if I were a Delegate, I would be damn mad because it is cutting and running. Either give it to them or do not give it to them, but do not go halfway on it. Let us go with the constitutional amendment, and I will support it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER].

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, this morning I got to watch our colleagues on the CBS program "CBS This Morning" for 2 hours. They were over in the Committee on Ways and Means room and just as I turned it on my good friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. KIM] said that he hoped very much that Democrats and Republicans would be able to come together and work to solve the problems that we have as a Nation.

The tragedy is, here we are, our first act is to battle over this rules provision which is being imposed on those of us in this House.

To me, many very eloquent arguments have been made by my Democrat colleagues, but it should be very clear, article I, section 2 of the U.S. Constitution says, the U.S. House of Representatives shall be composed of Members elected every second year by the people of the several States.

So the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] was absolutely right. We should do it the proper way. Amend the U.S. Constitution. Do not do what USA Today said, "The Democrats first order of business is a power grab that short-circuits the Constitution." That would be blatantly unfair.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from the Virgin Islands [Mr. DE LUGO].

Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Speaker, as a Delegate from a U.S. territory who has served in this House for 18 years, I will take that half a loaf. We already had this debate two decades ago, when the Members of this House determined that it was constitutional to give the vote to the Delegates for the first time since the Founding Fathers, for the first time in the committees. What we are talking about here today is a committee, the Committee of the Whole.

We are in the House right now, but most of the business, as has been said, is in the Committee of the Whole. We can change the Committee in any way we want to because that is not the House. We are in the Committee of the Whole. The symbol of the House is put down lower. The Speaker is not in the chair. It is a Chairman. And we want to participate. That is all we want to do, participate.

We have already amended these rules so that we cannot be decisive. We cannot reach into the House and determine anything. But let us participate.

When Desert Storm came up, I could not vote. I could not vote for my constituents, and yet within days after this House endorsed Desert Storm and we went to war in Desert Storm, three of my constituents were dead.

We pay Federal taxes, Federal taxes. We use the same forms as my colleagues use. We pay the same rate as my colleagues do. It is the Federal law and the Congress that says that money will stay in the territory and be used in the territory. If we want to change it, change it. We do not want to, and I know we will not.

But that is not the issue here. The issue here is participation for 4½ million Americans. France allows it. Spain allows it. Let us allow it.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, let me just say that as to the last speaker, the gentleman from the Virgin Islands [Mr. DE LUGO]. I have great respect for him. He overlooks the kind of vote trading and deals which might be cut to ensure that the Delegate vote does not make the critical difference. One of the Delegates in fact boasted the other day that permitting Delegate voting in the Committee of the Whole will enable Delegates to cut deals and trade votes. That is what we are concerned about. We want them to participate just the way they are now and they do a darn good job at it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, the American people fully expect us to reform the Congress, not to betray the American people by the kinds of antics that we are already observing.

There is another issue that is buried in all of this debate here today. Every single year the Congress fails to obey its own laws when on September 30 of every year, when a budget is supposed to have been enacted, we fail to enact such a budget. And the next day we encounter the temporary funding resolutions that make a mockery out of the budget process.

We have been trying for several terms now to bring in an instant replay type of resolution to that problem, to say that if on September 30 we have not adopted a budget by the prescribed deadline, that the next day an automatic reversion to last year's, an instant replay of last year's budget should go into effect.

Here we are today, however, prohibiting a Republican substitute or debate which would allow a modest reform of that to allow us to continue the business of the Congress with at least a budget in place that will not violate the will of the American people and then prevent those kinds of things that happen of mischief that the continuing resolution provides for us.

It is time to reform. Now is the time to reform.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Guam [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, today marks a potentially proud moment for our fellow U.S. citizens from the territories. This body, by granting the Committee of the Whole vote, recognizes the struggle is not for full representation, for indeed what we are faced with is only a partial compromise, but a positive step for more effective representation for our fellow citizens.

This is not a vote on whether we have a certain number of constituents. As indicated, it is not even a full vote. It is a vote on Members' position on the meaning of U.S. citizenship and exclusivity, a vote on whether Members believe in exclusion or inclusion, whether they believe that citizens of non-States are people just like us or do they believe that they are nonpersons.

My colleagues, earlier this year I was proud to visit the Vietnam Memorial for the first time in my life. In that I saw the names of many people named Quinata, Taimanglo and Santos and Guerrero, childhood friends. It pains me deeply to think that the memory of those individuals will be sacrificed on the basis of a pitch for constitutionality when clearly this meets all constitutional provisions.

I urge my colleagues, on the question of partisanship, it is not the Democrats that are raising this as a partisan issue. I have two letters here from the Governor of Guam and the minority of the Guam Legislature who ask the Republican minority to put aside partisanship because this issue was first raised by a Republican Delegate from Guam. This is a position that was discussed before the results of the election were known to anyone.

This is a right thing to do. This is a good thing to do. This is a fair thing to do. Allow us, for God's sake, to participate in this noble House.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLF].

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the rules package offered by the Democrats today. This package contains a number of highly objectionable provisions—including limitations on time for Members to speak during special orders—which weaken the ability of Members to represent their constituents.

One provision, however, stands out above the rest as an unequalled infringement of Members' rights. This provision would allow Delegates the right to vote on the House floor. When Americans went to the polls last November, they voted for change. But I cannot imagine they would have supported the change being proposed today.

Members on both sides have made interesting arguments about the right to vote of Delegates. But these arguments only become relevant after one has accepted the premise that allowing a Delegate to vote on the House floor is constitutional. It is not.

Article 1, section 2, plainly states that "The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States." Clearly, Delegates are not Members and they do not represent States. As such they should not be afforded the status essentially the same as duly-sworn Members of Congress.

Why, then, are Democrats pushing an issue of such questionable constitutional and policy standing? As has already been stated, in 1970, Congressman FOLEY argued "That a constitutional amendment would be required to give [a Delegate] a vote in the Committee of the Whole." Today, however, it appears he feels very differently.

I will point out further, that contrary to what some have argued, it has never been determined that allowing Delegates to vote in other committees of the House is constitutional. Therefore, the argument that allowing Delegates a vote on the floor is a logical next step for them is absurd.

Another valid concern is that of proportional representation. The typical Member of Congress represents more than 500,000 people. Yet the population of American Samoa is only 47,000, giving every man, woman, and child, more than 10 times the representation of most Americans. That is just plain wrong.

The disparity is far greater when we consider registered voters. In the 10th district of Virginia, which I represent, there are more than 292,000 registered voters, yet there are only 15,000 registered voters in American Samoa and only 40,000 in all of the Virgin Islands.

The final point which must be made is that of representation without taxation. Residents of Guam, American Samoa, and the U.S. Virgin Islands pay no Federal income tax. Yet we are debating on the floor today whether or not to give their Delegates a vote on issues such as raising personal income tax rates. It makes no sense.

What concerns me most, Mr. Speaker, is that, until today, this entire debate has been conducted in secret. The decision to allow Delegates to vote on the floor was made in a closed meeting of House Democrats without the input of House Republicans and without the knowledge of most Americans. If supporters of this important provision are so confident that the American people will support it, then full, open debate should be held before it is brought to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, the rules which pass the House today, to a large degree, will determine the level of fairness and good will between Democrats and Republicans during the next 2 years. There is much to be done in the 103d Congress for the good of the people of this country. But if this is the type of political power play Republicans should expect from House Democrats during the next 2 years, then it's going to be a very long, difficult Congress for both parties.

I urge all Members to vote against this rules package and against the provision allowing Delegates to vote on the House floor.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO].

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I think we first have to, once and for all, deal with this question of constitutionality and the source of this CRS opinion. When we act in the House of Representatives to resolve issues, we act constitutionally. We are not changing that.

The Congressional Research Service opinion, which comes down on the side of constitutionality, is essentially the same opinion that Republican Ben Blaz asked for in the mid-1980's. I really resent increasingly the partisan tone that somehow this is a grabback of five votes by the Democrats. We all know that two of these Commissioners within my service here have been Republicans from these territories. They are not dedicated Democratic seats. They are up for grabs, because there are two parties in all of these territories, and all of them are alive and well and competitive.

We are talking about not rewarding but recognizing the taxpaying, country-serving people who live in these areas. They have been eloquently represented on the floor today. We simply want them to be represented in every debate taken on this floor.

We are not interfering with anyone's constitutional prerogatives. We are extending, in the most diverse and inclusive Congress ever elected, and we are getting kudos for that, a slight additional responsibility to people who have long deserved it, who have been prevented from really exercising the rights of their constituents, I believe, on this floor.

This is not partisan; it is in the best traditions of an institution that reaches out, that is an internationalist, in a sense, body that understands the world in which we have to legislate, in which we have to play a role.

We are a country made up of people of all races and ethnic groups. I do not know why we are afraid to bring additional representation from those islands, from the District of Columbia, from places that have long been affiliated with this Nation. I think it is in the best tradition of this body, and I think it would make it a proud moment if we stand together on this instead of falling to partisan wrangling.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, we have just gone through a long election, and the next six Members I will recognize will all be freshman Members from this side of the aisle. First, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. CRAPO]. He is a member of our Republican leadership. He has only been here for 1 day, and he is already in our leadership.

Mr. CRAPO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, as I campaigned, I campaigned heavily on issues of reform, as did many, if not most, of us here. Many of those issues of reform deal with issues that are now governed by our rules.

As I have been here today, I have been asked by members of the press how it feels to be getting sworn in on my first day as a new Congressman, and I thought about that, and I thought about the fact that more important than our swearing in today is the fact that we are dealing with reform issues on a broad scale. I want to talk for just a moment about the ones that are not getting the attention because of the focus of this debate on the Delegate issue.

I talked much during my campaign about the need for reforms that the Republican platform had put forward for a new rules package, reforms that I now understand after today's results are not going to even get a vote on this floor, reforms that should be getting much more debate than we are getting time to address to them.

Let me just focus on one specific. There was a proposal for term limits, term limits on ranking members and committee chairmen. If there is one issue that I think vast majorities of the people of this country are speaking up to this Congress about, it is term limits. If there is one concern that seems to be universal across this country, it is the tendency for consolidation of power in the hands of a few for long periods of time. Yet that issue is going to go by the wayside today as a partial proposal in our rules package, because we are not today going to get a vote on whether we should put term limits on committee chairmen and term limits on ranking members of committees. That and many other issues need to be addressed.

It would be my hope that we can find an opportunity that we can address the needed issues of reform in this Congress, and not on the very first day of this Congress forgo some of the needed issues and important issues that the people of this country are saying to this Congress that they expect of us. The people of this country want term limits. We can give one of the biggest, first steps to that movement today and in this Congress if we do not reject the opportunity for those limits.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, the next of our six freshman Republicans that campaigned for real reform is the gentleman from California [Mr. KIM]. I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. KIM].

Mr. KIM. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, as the Members know, I am a freshman, very fresh, only got sworn in about a couple of hours ago. I am very disappointed and shocked today. We have a serious matter in California, especially. We have almost 10-percent unemployment. I am expecting some things for this serious matter, some job creation, some economic innovative plans. Here we are, talking about promoting Washington, DC as an independent State? I do not understand this. I think the priorities are all mixed up.

Second, we are talking about equal voting power to U.S. territorial representatives? I represent 600,000 people. I understand American Samoa has only 47,000. Does this mean I have one equal right as they do? I think that is unfair.

On top of that, they do not even pay a penny of taxes to our Government, yet again, I have the same equal right? That is absolute nonsense. I am very, very disappointed to learn this. Why do we have to deal with this first priority, on the first day? I do not understand this. I am very disappointed.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, the third of our freshman Republicans campaigning for reform is from another cross-section of America. I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LINDER].

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I do not know what offends me more, the changes or the process. It is clear to me that the leadership is not convinced that it can win on any of these issues on an up or down vote, so they do not give us an opportunity to vote on them up or down. We are not given an opportunity to amend the package.

I had hoped to speak about term limits for ranking chairmen like we have passed for ranking members. We are not given an opportunity to offer that amendment. We are not given an opportunity to vote for that in our package.

It is to me a vexing thought that I may not even be able to put before the Members for a vote in the next 2 years the very issues that my constituents sent me here to address, and it is very sad.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, the fourth of our freshman Republicans campaigning on reform, going out to the far part of the country, is the gentleman form Oklahoma [Mr. ISTOOK].

I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ISTOOK].

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, why do we need back door maneuvers. If the goal is statehood, I would say to the Members, make the case for statehood directly. That is what the Oklahoma Territory did and the Indiana Territory did when together in 1907 they became the 46th star, the State of Oklahoma.

Before that we had people go to war, the Spanish-American War, and when we became a State we became responsible for local and State taxes as well as for Federal taxes.

Many a wayward politician embarked on the wrong path when he started to stuff the ballot box. Franklin D. Roosevelt got his comeuppance when he tried to pack the Supreme Court. Today we decide whether to pack the U.S. House of Representatives. After all, if it is legal to add five votes, it is equally as legal to add 50 or 500.

Until today, the U.S. Constitution established the formula by which we determined the votes allocated to each State of the Union, the number of votes. Today we are being asked to abandon that. Oklahoma went through the process of territory to statehood. We paid our dues. I do not think it is improper to ask that everyone who wants the privileges of statehood go through the same process as Oklahoma did.

□ 1600

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARTLETT], the fifth of our freshman Republicans who campaigned for reform.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I am 66 years old. I am the oldest Republican freshman. I may be a freshman here; I am not a freshman to life.

We Republicans are anxious to support President Clinton in several important initiatives which he has proposed to help assure economic recovery. We stand ready to strongly support his proposals for any and all tax cuts, for a line-item veto, for a reduction in the capital gains tax rate, and for investment tax credits. But we cannot get to these important proposals until we get past the Delegate voting issue.

This Delegate voting proposal is wrongheaded and manifestly unfair. It cannot be tolerated.

If it cannot be harmoniously negotiated, we shall insist on our legitimate rights by utilizing parliamentary procedures until sanity prevails. It is intolerable, and we shall not tolerate it.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, we have one last freshman Republican of the six who have spoken or will speak on this issue. It is interesting to note that not one freshman Democrat has come to this floor to support this Democrat rules package. We have to ask ourselves why.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. HORN].

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, many of us ran for office wanting a better day for America. We wanted to operate with the Democratic Party, with the new President on a bipartisan basis, just as this Nation has in foreign policy since the late 1940's. There are major problems to be solved in the economy, in the deficit, and we need to deal with those.

We heard the eloquent remarks of the Republican leader and the Democratic Speaker, both honorable men, civil, gentlemen. I have known the Speaker since we were staff members together in the U.S. Senate, the other body, if you will.

I think the tragedy of this debate, where there is no committee study, no examination, no leading scholars coming in, no review by retired judges, the tragedy is that this is poisoning the waters for what could be one of the most productive Congresses in this century. I sincerely hope that it will be. But this is not the way to start this session.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT], the majority leader.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I want to reiterate and make clear the amendment that was made in these rules that affects the Delegate voting rule provision so that Members again clearly understand it.

Some on the other side have said if this rule is put through it would mean that the vote of the Delegates is the same as the vote of other Members. One Member said three Delegates could out-vote the population of one State. A Member said that the Delegates' vote would be as important as a Member's vote. That is not true.

Under the amendment, if a vote is held and the margin of victory or loss is within the margin of the number of Delegates, any Member can stand up and make a motion to go back to the House and revote the issue without the Delegates being able to vote, because under this rules change Delegates would not be able to vote in the House.

Members may say well, it is half a loaf. If we are going to give them something, let us give it to them or not give it to them.

Let us make it clear. Their association of their entities, their territories, is not complete with the United States. That is a statehood question, and that question can only be decided under the provision of the Constitution that deals with statehood.

So what we are doing here is trying to evolve toward a process that reflects the kind of association that these entities have with the United States. We allowed them to vote in committee and now we are saying they can vote in the Committee of the Whole.

Is it complete participation? Absolutely not. But it is important participation, because unlike present times or past times, they can come to the floor, they can involve themselves in the debate and feel that at least they will be able to register the views of their constituents, as they can in committee, in the Committee of the Whole. So it makes their participation here more meaningful and complete.

I think it is a worthy rules change. I urge Members to vote for it.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. WALKER. I have a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. EDWARDS of California). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, at the outset of this debate we were told that the rules that we were debating were in fact the printed rules that were handed to the minority side. The gentleman from Missouri has just described a process that is not in this rule; namely, that Members would have to stand up and ask for the vote to go back in to the full House after the Committee of the Whole. But the rules that were given to us indicated that such a matter would be automatic and would not require someone to stand up and make that kind of motion.

My parliamentary inquiry is, Are we debating the rules that the minority was led to believe were in print and before us?

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow the gentleman from Missouri to respond?

Mr. WALKER. Surely. I am happy to.

Mr. GEPHARDT. As usual, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's reading is superior to my speaking. His reading was correct, and I misspoke.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. ABERCROMBIE].

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to my colleagues today as a voting Member from the last territory. Our State is only 33 years old, and Members need only look at my face if they want to look around the room for minorities, because I am a minority in my district, and yet I was elected. I was born in Buffalo, NY, but the people of the State of Hawaii voted for me after we became a State, when we were a territory before.

What were we struggling for? We were struggling for equality, the same thing that we preach to people all around the world. If I were in the Yukon Territory right now, I would be voting in Ottawa with a full vote, and yet we talk about the North American Free-Trade Agreement and we preach to the Canadians. And we preach to the Federal district in Mexico City. The Federal district in Mexico City has the full vote, but we do not have it in the District of Columbia. If you are a member of the Danish Parliament and you live in Greenland, you can do it. Greenland has the vote, but we do not give it to people in the United States of America. And Members sit here on the other side of the aisle and talk about democracy, and talk about freedom, and preach to me about the Constitution.

This Constitution was given to me by Spark M. Matsunaga, who served in this House with some of you folks, and many of his people had to spend their lives in detention camps because they were not thought fully worthy of being able to shed their blood for the Government of the United States of America.

And I have heard Samoa, American Samoa denigrated on this floor all day long for their numbers, and where they are from, and about taxes. Let me tell you what their taxes do. Here is what they do for veterans. Here is what the U.S. Government says, the United States General Accounting Office: Supply shortages at the LBJ Medical Center, quarterly visits provide limited care, post-traumatic stress syndrome, psychiatric needs not met, concerns with referral programs not met, drug and alcohol treatment limited. That is what they get for paying their taxes, those of you who sit here in judgment of Samoans and Guamanians and others and the rest of the people who can die for this country, live and die for this country, it is a shame for those who would raise the Constitution against our fellow citizens.

Vote "yes" for freedom for all of the territories.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA].

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, the world is watching us, and I am concerned that the debate has turned into an area that we should not even be discussing or even thinking. We cannot go tell the Soviet Union how to have freedom and justice, we cannot force countries that we will cut off your funds unless you have votes, unless you have representation.

My interpretation is if you are enfranchised as a U.S. citizen by birth or by acquisition, that gives you full equality with every other American, and we should not be talking about numbers.

I think some of us may want to go back, if you will forgive me, when some remember separate-but-equal was legal, the poll tax was legal, women not voting was legal.

□ 1610

Mr. Speaker, I think some of us feel that maybe those were the good old days.

I think the world should know that an American has a right, and it has been said too many times, but I repeat it, because I saw the casket of a Puerto Rican under a U.S. flag. By God, if that did not win him the right to be represented, his people to be represented here, I do not know what will.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER].

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, millions of Americans voted this fall in favor of referenda limiting the terms of legislators. Such referenda were on the ballot in 14 States and passed in all 14, some by very large margins. Several of these measures sought to limit terms of Members of this body. But it is clear, at least to this observer, that such efforts are in vain, that an amendment to the U.S. Constitution is necessary to achieve this objective.

Now, the Founding Fathers made it very difficult indeed to amend the Constitution, requiring two-thirds of each House of the Congress and three-fourths of the State legislatures. While I do not favor limiting congressional terms, since such restraint impairs the judgment of the electors—and for many other substantive reasons—a result very similar to the objective of those desiring term limits can be achieved without amending the Constitution, even without passing a law.

All that is needed is to change the rules of the House—and the Senate—to limit the time a Member can serve as chair of a committee or subcommittee to a period of 6 consecutive years.

This is not an unreasonable proposition. Any agenda that a chair might have ought reasonably to be addressed within three Congresses. In addition, it would make the body more dynamic and responsive by a good measure, something sadly lacking when Members can chair committees and subcommittees for 10 or 20 or 30 years, building and maintaining the iron triangles of special interests, bureaucrats, and the Chair, which has been so unresponsive and a large part of the gridlock here in Washington. Witness, for example, the fact that for 12 years the Congress—under the control the entire time by supposedly pro-environmental Democrats—could not pass a reauthorization of the Clean Air Act.

Without these long-term fiefdoms of power, where a Chair has omnipotence regarding bills assigned to his or her committee or subcommittee, the proclivities of voters to return their long-serving Members to yet another term will be greatly reduced and the effect of term limits achieved without disturbing in the least the judgment of the electors.

My party has decided to go half way with this proposal that I brought to my leadership last summer. We will offer today a motion to commit applicable to Chairs of full committees only and omitting subcommittee Chairs. This, I believe, is unfortunate and leaves the proposal less likely to be supported by Democrats and, indeed, perhaps some Republicans. There are only 21 committees, and thus only 42 positions, affected. This makes the vote on the question almost personal. Add the subcommittees and you are probably affecting far more than half of the Members, who would find it exceedingly uncomfortable to be voting against reform and in favor of their own personal interests.

Yet, I am grateful we are drawing the question on committee Chairs at least. I believe that a vote against this reform will be one exceedingly difficult for Members to explain, and while they may willingly cast it to avoid disfavor with sitting Chairs, they will pay a price for doing so in the next election.

The motion to commit on term limits for Chairs may be combined with that on votes in the Committee of the Whole House for Delegates and Resident Commissioners. While I would have preferred a straight vote on the term limit issue, it may actually be of benefit since the vote to give Delegates and Resident Commissioners, some of whom represent less than 45,000 people—American Samoa—the same vote as Members in the Committee of the Whole is patently egregious and unconstitutional. Most of the people Delegates and Resident Commissioners represented do not pay Federal income taxes. Representation without taxation.

So let us test our resolve for change. I believe this small change in the rules would do salutary things for the dynamics of the body and would reflect a willingness to abandon business as usual. Let us see who is for it and who is against and whether the majority party forces its members to vote as a bloc or allows the independence of judgment that our Constitution and representative system envisioned.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Without objection, a call of the House is ordered.

There was no objection.

The call was taken by electronic device, and the following Members responded to their names:

☐ 1635

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. EDWARDS of California). On this rollcall, 409 Members have recorded their presence by electronic device, a quorum.

Under the rule, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

RULES OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] has 6 minutes remaining and the gentlewoman from New York [Ms. SLAUGHTER] has 4½ minutes remaining.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to be able to yield all of our remaining time, 6 minutes, to our great Republican leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL].

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, I rise in support of the Republican rules package, as distinguished from the Democrat package that has been offered here today.

At the very outset, I want to applaud the Members on my side for their excellent presentations in supporting our case, from the half-a-dozen freshmen Members who spoke for reform, to those of our senior Members, including the distinguished whip, who laid out so well the tax ramifications of the issue.

Then I have to make some comment with respect to this effort on the part of the Democratic majority over the last several Congresses to keep tightening down tighter and tighter on the rules to suppress the minority.

Now, admittedly part of our frustration is born of the fact that we have been in the minority so long, but I have to ask the question, what are you afraid of in this deliberative body? To have those on this side well-equipped to make arguments and then have the cross fertilization of those views ultimately, hopefully to a better piece of legislation?

I guess experience teaches us that having the word reform on our lips is no substitute for having it on our agenda.

In the 102d Congress, we Republicans urged the House to drastically reform the way it does its business. We wanted to eliminate patronage and replace it with professionalism.

We proposed that the House eliminate the Office of the Doorkeeper, appoint a chief financial officer, hire professionals to run the House post office and the Sergeant at Arms Office, and find a nationally respected legal scholar to represent the House as its lawyer.

In other words, we proposed an ambitious, far-reaching plan to reform the day-to-day operation of the House.

Well, the Democratic majority decided instead to hire a House administrator, and basically ignored the rest of our reform proposals.

Today, we Republicans intend to offer again our ideas for comprehensive reform. Our rules package includes, among many other things, a 6-year term limit on committee chairmen and ranking members. I should tell the majority that we adopted this resolution in our own caucus.

☐ 1640

Our package also includes, a ban on proxy voting, equitable party ratios in amongst our committees, and a one-third reduction in committee staffs, 10 percent for the next 3 years, and a host of other proposals totaling 48 in number.

What has the Democrat majority proposed?

First and most egregious, Mr. Speaker, and where most of the debate is centered today, the majority wants to give Delegates and Commissioners a vote on the floor of the House.

Mr. Speaker, the floor of the House is not just another big room in this building. It is the place where the ultimate decisions of our representative democracy are debated and ultimately voted upon.

In fact, one might say that the floor of the House is not a place so much as it is an idea. It is the idea of true representative democracy in which every, every elected Representative from a State and only an elected Representative from a State, has equal rights. Any attempt to allow the floor of the House to be used in any other way is, in the eyes of the minority, unconstitutional, unprecedented, and unacceptable under any guise, no matter what the motivation. I might say that this last-minute attempt on the part of the majority to modify what they originally had proposed as a means of satisfying the minority and all the rest suggests that their premise to begin with was wrong.

Mr. Speaker, over 50 years ago President Roosevelt attempted to pack the Supreme Court with Justices who would follow his political philosophy. Then it was called court packing.

In my mind this House packing scheme is of the same ilk: the use of raw political power which can only be countered by popular outrage. And I believe the American people all across the country are against this grab for more power.

Mr. Speaker, it will not work in Walla Walla, it will not serve in Shreveport, it will not do in Denver, it will not sell in Sacramento, and it most emphatically will not play in Peoria.

Now I am going to include with my remarks an editorial from the New York Times entitled, "Have the House Democrats No Shame?" I am also including an article from the San Diego Tribune entitled, "Packing the House." Any number of pundits have written on this particular subject.

Second, the Democratic majority wants to allow rolling quorums in the House, and I want to commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] for describing that process so eloquently as he did earlier in the debate.

Now rolling quorums may sound like one of those bits of esoteric jargon we legislators like to throw around to impress each other. Without going into the parliamentary complexities, a rolling quorum defeats the purpose of collective deliberation and decision making. The very word "Congress" has at its roots the concept of coming together, of being together, of political community, and to institute procedures that fragment the collective sense of decisionmaking and responsibility in the House is to demean the very concept of the Congress.

The two rules packages presented to my colleagues offer two different paths. One road leads to more gridlock and less freedom, and the other leads to a more effective Congress, a more representative House, and a greater guarantee for the sanctity of the legislative process.

I would urge my colleagues, both Republican and Democrat, to choose the right path and defeat the previous question so we can work together to implement true reform. Failing that, I urge my colleagues to support our motion to commit which sets a 6-year term limit on committee chairs and ranking members and deletes the majority's proposal to allow Delegate voting on the House floor.

So, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would ask my colleagues to vote down the previous question, give us that opportunity for those reforms to take effect in the 103d Congress.

The articles referred to are as follows:

[From the New York Times, Dec. 29, 1992]

HAVE THE HOUSE DEMOCRATS NO SHAME?

House Democrats have just awarded themselves five more votes. Unfazed by the crying need for Congressional reform, the Democratic caucus proposes to let non-voting delegates vote on the House floor. All five are, of course, Democrats.

Embarrassed by criticism of their greedy grab, the Democrats may try to water it down when the new Congress meets to adopt rules. But that's no answer. This maneuver is nothing but shameless political tyranny.

The Constitution says the House shall be composed of "Members chosen * * * by the People of the several States." Delegates aren't members, and the places they represent—the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, the Virgin Islands and American Samoa—aren't states.

Delegates are already permitted to vote in House committees; now the Democrats would let them vote in the Committee of the Whole. That's when the whole House sits as a "committee" and does most of its work on legislation.

The Republicans are justifiably furious, and want to take the issue to court. They have good ammunition. For example: Whatever happened to one person one vote? For the most part, each member represents about 520,000 constituents, but the Virgin Island's delegate has only 95,000 while Puerto Rico's has 3.5 million.

In 1970, Representative Thomas Foley—now Speaker—said "it is very clear * * * that a constitutional amendment would be required to give [delegates] a vote in the Committee of the Whole, or in the full House." What changed his mind? Very likely the mounting pressure to make Washington D.C. a state. Failing to deliver on statehood, the Democrats offer a half-measure that gives the D.C. delegate more clout—and gives the other four delegates the same because it would be politically awkward to leave them out.

All of which adds up to an outrageous power play, as if an 80-plus majority weren't enough for absolute control. It is a distressing sign that the leadership hasn't the slightest clue that people are fed up with Washington's business as usual.

[From the Chicago Tribune, Dec. 30, 1992]

THE DEMOCRATS' GREEDY POWER GRAB

American voters trimmed the sails of the Democratic congressional leadership just a bit last month, reducing the party's House majority by 10 votes. Now the Democrats have concocted a little scheme to cut their losses in half.

The Democrats have given preliminary approval to rules changes that would give almost complete voting privileges to five congressional delegates who represent the District of Columbia and the territories of Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico. The five are all Democrats.

This amounts to a blatant end-run around the Constitution, which allows full voting status only to the representatives of the states. The delegates are accorded floor privileges and allowed to vote in committees. But under the rules change, the provision for committee voting privileges would be extended to the Committee of the Whole, under which most substantive business of the entire House is conducted.

This is a power grab and a disservice to government. While it boosts Democratic congressional strength, it also damages the party's image and some of its long-term interests. It would be a setback for the laudable goal of establishing statehood for the District of Columbia through a constitutional amendment.

Republican opponents argue that the campaign for statehood has little to do with the right of D.C. residents to congressional representation and much to do with expanding the political muscle of the Democratic Party. When the Democrats stage such a messy show as this one on the delegates' voting rights, they lend credence to the GOP argument.

Some Democrats have begun to realize they're sitting on a public-relations disaster. They hope to soften the impact with an amendment that would limit the influence of the delegates' votes. If the delegates provided the difference in the outcome of any matter before the Committee of the Whole, the matter would be automatically sent to the House floor for another vote—in which the delegates couldn't participate.

That is a silly, convoluted and wholly unnecessary procedure. The Democrats' alternative plan, in effect, would subvert the Constitution to give the territorial delegates the power to vote, but guarantee that any time their votes really count * * * they won't be counted.

The Democrats can't finesse their way around this one. If they include the delegate voting rights next week when they take up the package of House rules that will govern the new Congress, they will seriously damage the cause of D.C. statehood and their own standing in the eyes of the public.

When they reconvene next week, the Democratic majority would be wise to drop the clumsy power grab and worry about the real business of the nation.

[From the San Diego Union Tribune, Jan. 5, 1993]

PACKING THE HOUSE—DEMOCRATS PUSH A VOTING SCAM

In an undisguised power play, the Democrats who control the House of Representatives are expected to vote today to extend floor voting privileges to the four delegates and one resident commissioner from Guam, American Samoa, Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands and the District of Columbia. All five members are, not surprisingly, Democrats.

In the past, these delegates have been allowed to vote only in committees. Under the proposed rule change, they would be permitted to vote when the full House is functioning as a Committee of the Whole. That term is used when representatives meet on the floor for debates and votes except final passage—in other words, when most significant action is taken.

The problems with the Democratic proposal are threefold:

First, the action is probably unconstitutional. The Constitution states that "the House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several states." The five delegates do not, by any stretch of the imagination, represent states of the Union.

Second, this proposal is unfair. American Samoa, with 47,000 citizens, would have virtually the same clout in the House as Montana, with a population of 800,000. Each would have one voting representative. Likewise, the U.S. Virgin Islands has only 102,000 residents and Guam has 133,000, yet the average congressional district in the states has more than 500,000 citizens.

Third, the House rule change would constitute representation without taxation. In all of the territories, unlike in the District of Columbia, residents pay no federal income taxes. Consequently, the delegates could vote for higher taxes even though their constituents would not have to pay those taxes. If, indeed, territories are to be given a vote, they should be taxed as well.

Aside from these practical political considerations, the Democrats' House-packing proposal would subvert the democratic process and the chamber's long-standing traditions and procedures. In the November elections, Democrats lost 10 House seats. By changing the rules, they would get back half that number.

But gaining that extra partisan advantage is not worth undermining the Constitution or the power of the elected representatives from the 50 states. The Democrats, in their caucus meeting this morning, should withdraw the proposal or, at the very least, allow the full House to vote on it separately. That way, the proposal's merits—or lack thereof—could be more fairly debated.

This issue presents an opportunity for San Diego's new Democratic representatives, Lynn Schenk and Bob Filner, to show they are independent thinkers who put the importance of California's taxpayers and the Constitution ahead of partisan politics. Let's see if they measure up.

[From the Washington Times, Dec. 16, 1992]

FODDER FOR THE TROUGH OF POWER

(By Bruce Fein)

On Dec. 8, 1992, the Democratic Caucus of the House of Representatives approved a proposed change in the House Rules that would empower Delegates from the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and Guam and the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico to vote in the Committee of the Whole.

Next Jan. 5, the House will vote on the rule change. The measure is expected to pass via a Democrat steamroller, since all the Delegates and the Resident Commissioner are Democrats. That shameless impending power grab, however, is blatantly unconstitutional, a conclusion conceded by House Speaker Thomas Foley, Washington Democrat, in 1970.

Article I, Section 1 of the Constitution entrusts all federal "legislative" power to the Senate and House of Representatives. Article I, Section 2 confines membership in the House to persons chosen biannually "by the People of the several states." In other words, the legislative powers of the House may be exercised only by persons elected by voters in the various states, which excludes persons representing territories of the United States, the District of Columbia, the President of the United States, foreign governments, the Vatican, or otherwise.

Under House Rules, the Committee of the Whole manifestly exercises legislative power. For example, if it declines to report an amendment to the House, that decision cannot be overruled by the House. Additionally, amendments to amendments considered in the Committee of the Whole are not separately reported to the House. If that committee defeats a motion to rise and report a general appropriation bill after its reading for amendment, then a limitation amendment is permitted in the House. If such a motion is agreed to in the Committee of the Whole, the House cannot consider a limitation amendment.

The Committee of the Whole further votes on appeals of certain procedural rulings of the chair that could change a bill yet would be shielded from review by the House.

In sum, voting in the Committee of the Whole epitomizes the exercise of legislative power because of its immediate and direct impact on the enactment of laws. That conclusion is reinforced by Article I, Section 6 of the Constitution—the so-called "speech or debate clause." It provides legal immunity for Members of Congress "for any speech or debate in either House." The U.S. Supreme Court declared in Doe vs. McMillan (1973) that the immunity reaches any conduct within the sphere of legislative activity." That sphere, the high court had elaborated in Gravel vs. U.S. (1972), includes conduct that is "an integral part of the deliberative and communicative process by which Members participate in committee and House proceedings with respect to the consideration and passage or rejection of proposed legislation."

If House Members act within the sphere of legislative activity" when voting in the Committee of the Whole, then the same must be true regarding any others who cast votes in that forum, including delegates and resident commissioners. Votes cast by the latter, however, should not be counted because they derogate from the Constitution's exclusive assignment of federal legislative power to elected representatives from the several states. That conclusion was self-evident to Speaker Foley on Sept. 15, 1970, when the House was considering a proposal to confer the vote on the resident commissioner from Puerto Rico in standing committees. Mr. Foley categorically lectured: "Now it is very clear * * * that a constitutional amendment would be required to give the Resident Commissioner a vote in the Committee of the Whole or the full House."

Congress, of course, may delegate legislative power to the executive branch or independent agencies, but only if it articulates reasonably specific standards to confine the discretion of the recipients of the power. Thus, the Supreme Court has invalidated a delegation to the executive lacking standards for its exercise, Schecter Poultry vs. U.S. (1935), but has upheld delegations that provide policy guidance for the recipients, e.g., U.S. vs. Rock Royal Co-operatives (1939). The delegation doctrine cannot save the impending House rule change, however, because it leaves unfettered the voting discretion of the delegates and resident commissioner.

The chief arguments favoring the constitutionality of the rule change are feeble. It is said that since the Constitution does not expressly limit the substance of committee rules, then the House is free of any restraints so long as the full House is required to approve any legislative measures. But Article I, Sections 1 and 2 expressly confine the exercise of any legislative power, preliminary or final, to members of Congress. There are no exceptions. Further, the argument exalts form over substance. There is no gainsaying that votes in the Committee of the Whole and other committees directly affect the substance of legislation. Indeed, that is the reason why that opportunity to vote is craved by the delegates and resident commissioner.

Manipulating committee voting rights to circumvent the Constitution's exclusive assignment of legislative power to Representatives is admittedly clever. But as the Supreme Court taught in Terry vs. Adams (1953), sophisticated evasions of the Constitution are as void as the simpleminded. The high court held unconstitutional the Texas Jaybird Democratic Association's exclusion of blacks from its primaries. Although the Association was simply a private organization with no recognized status under state law, its primaries, de facto, dictated the general election victor. The Association was, in effect, the State, the court reasoned, and thus was equally restrained by the 15th Amendment.

To accept the sweeping constitutional arguments of the rule's proponents would concede the power of a House majority to emasculate the legislative power of Representatives. The arguments place no limits on the number of non-Members who could vote in the Committee of the Whole under a House rule. That number, for instance, might reach 1,000. Additionally, the arguments would authorize a rule permitting the Speaker to endow family members and relatives, cronies, campaign contributors and representatives of foreign governments or political parties with committee voting rights. They would also permit a rule prohibiting a floor vote on a House bill that would override a District of Columbia city ordinance without the consent of the District of Columbia delegate. There is no constitutional text or purpose, however, that would justify such vast dilutions of the legislative powers of the elected Representatives of the people of the several states.

At present, House rules permit delegates and the resident commissioner to vote in standing committees, which exercise legislative power similar to that of the Committee of the Whole. Those voting privileges are thus unconstitutional, and should be challenged in federal court along with the impending Jan. 5 rule change regarding the Committee of the Whole. To avoid any speech or debate clause difficulties, the lawsuit should seek an injunction only against delegates and the resident commissioner, who are excluded from the protection of the clause.

Finley Peter Dunne would have sardonically quipped about this shameless abuse of power by House Democrats, "What's the Constitution between friends?"

[From the Washington Post, Dec. 17, 1992]

POWER GRAB IN THE HOUSE

(By George F. Will)

No wide-awake American will be startled by redundant evidence that power corrupts. Still, there is something notably brassy about what Speaker Tom Foley and his flock of lock-step House Democrats—another herd of independent minds—have decided to do regarding the five delegates to the House of Representatives from Guam, American Samoa, the U.S. Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico and the District of Columbia.

Most Americans have better things to do than monitor decisions of the House Democratic caucus, so most Americans do not know that their representation in the House is soon to be diluted. Democrats have decided to use their control of the House to give those five delegates—all Democrats, of course—the right to vote on the floor when the House is functioning as a "Committee of the Whole," in which mode most significant decisions are taken.

Pending an appeal to the Supreme Court, the Constitution is a mere parchment barrier to such majoritarian abuse. Article I, Section Two uses the word "state" seven times in referring to the only entity from which members of the House may be chosen. But now House Democrats have decided they can use control of House rules to confer virtually full voting privileges on those five delegates.

Welcome to the 1990s, a "Decade of Greed" in the Democrats' style. There is greed for power as well as money, and evidently an 82-seat advantage in the House is not enough for the Democrats.

Roll Call is the feisty newspaper that covers Congress and can be called, somewhat oxymoronically, the conscience of Capitol Hill. It knows abuse of power when it sees it and sees it in the Democrats' "outrageous behavior" and "power grab" regarding the delegates.

Roll Call notes that in November Democrats lost 10 House seats but in December decided to seize half that number of new seats without consulting any voters—other than themselves—in their caucus. Henceforth, in the Committee of the Whole—which as Roll Call rightly says "is where the important stuff gets done, except the final passage of a bill"—the 47,000 people of American Samoa, who do not pay income taxes, will have as much say as 800,000 Montanans about raising taxes and spending the revenues. Someone should explain to Samoans—and Democrats—the principle "No representation without taxation." The average congressional district has more than 500,000 residents. The U.S. Virgin Islands have 102,000; Guam has 133,000. Democrats suddenly have a, well, relaxed attitude about the hitherto sacred "one man, one vote" rule.

Roll Call, unable to contain its sarcasm (and unable to stop giving Democrats ideas for more mischief), says Puerto Rico, with 3.5 million residents and just one delegate, is getting gypped: "If Democrats became truly creative, they could divide Puerto Rico up into seven delegate districts, giving each a vote," or they could give a delegate to each of the three U.S. Virgin Islands, or to the four quadrants of the District of Columbia.

The Congressional Research Service was asked by its employers to examine the constitutionality of the sort of decision the Democratic caucus has vowed to take when Congress convenes. The CRS came up with a remarkably mushy analysis affirming the propriety of its employers' desire. CRS does so in language that would be laughable were the Constitution not being trashed. The analysis concludes with this tortured locution:

"* * * [Allowing a delegate to vote in the Committee of the Whole is apparently consistent with present Congressional interpretation of its constitutional authority."

That is: Doing what the Democratic majority is determined to do is "apparently" compatible with what the Democratic majority says it has authority to do.

For perspective on the arrogance and tendentiousness of today's rulers of Congress, consider a change from 22 years ago.

On Sept. 15, 1970, the House was debating a change in its rules that would allow the resident commissioner to the United States from Puerto Rico to serve on standing committees "in the same manner as Members of the House and shall possess in such committees the same powers and privileges as the other Members." A young congressman then in his third term said he supported that measure, even though "we clearly cannot give him a vote in the House."

Committee service, said this congressman, is one thing, and a much lesser thing, than voting on the House floor, Committees are mere creatures of the House, not of the Constitution, and "can be extinguished at will and created at will," without even the concurrence of the Senate.

Furthermore, said this congressman, service on committees involves only "preliminary advisory votes." Therefore such service does not involve a constitutional issue, as would votes cast in the Committee of the Whole or the full House. And, said this same congressman, "It is very clear, as the resident commissioner has said, that a constitutional amendment would be required to give the resident commissioner a vote in the Committee of the Whole of the full House."

Thus spoke Tom Foley, before unbridled power made him more flexible and casual about his convictions concerning the Constitution.

[From the Washington Post, Dec. 20, 1992]

FOLEY ON A D.C. TIGHTROPE

(By David S. Broder)

Early next month when Congress reconvenes, if all goes according to plan, the Democrats who control the House of Representatives will vote themselves five extra votes on the floor of the House. They will do that by amending the rules to allow the delegates from the District of Columbia, American Samoa, Guam and the Virgin Islands and the resident commissioner from Puerto Rico, all of whom happen to be Democrats, to vote for the first time when the House is sitting as "the committee of the whole."

Most of the time the House is in session it is sitting as "the committee of the whole." Custom and convenience dictate that's where virtually all debate and amending of legislation take place. So this proposal would give the five delegates parity with the 435 members elected from the states on all but the final votes on each piece of legislation.

Naturally, the Republicans are screaming foul and claiming that the Democrats are attempting a power play that would, at a stroke, wipe out half the 10-seat gain the GOP scored in last month's House elections. They are making enough of a racket that Speaker of the House Thomas S. Foley (D-Wash.) is showing some nervousness about attempting to ram the plan through on opening day. "The issue will be revisited," his spokesman, Jeffrey Biggs, told me when I asked about Foley's reaction to a letter of protest he had received from Minority Leader Robert H. Michel (R-Ill.).

For those of us on the sidelines, without a partisan horse to ride, the issue is intriguing both substantively and politically. It sheds light on a largely unexamined corner of the Constitution and reveals much about the tensions on Capitol Hill awaiting President-elect Clinton and his administration.

The move to get floor votes for the delegates began with Eleanor Holmes Norton, the highly capable lawyer who represents the District of Columbia in Congress. For many years, the District's and the territories' delegates have been allowed to vote in House committees, where legislation is shaped before being sent to the floor. In a legal memo last September, Norton argued that law and equity supported extending the same privilege to "the committee of the whole," i.e., the House floor. She argued that was especially true for the District, whose citizens, she noted, now "are subject to every obligation of citizenship—most notably federal taxation—but remain barred from sending voting representatives to Congress."

Foley and the other House Democratic leaders agreed to Norton's plea for the District and decided that the four territories should be given the same status. The decision was ratified early this month in the House Democratic causus—a move which brought the Republicans up in protest.

Norton told me in an interview the other day that "Republicans are making it a political issue when there is no legal or constitutional issue." But it is not quite that simple. Her brief supports the case for floor voting by delegates, but several authorities are not convinced.

A Congressional Research Service memo last November found that such a rules change might controvert an 1817 statute providing territorial delegates with "the right of debating but not of voting." As to the Constitution, the same memo said that "although delegates have had the authority to participate in the legislative process for years, no court appears to have addressed the question as to the constitutional implications of these practices."

When House parliamentarian William Holmes Brown was asked for his opinion last October, he said, "The proposal has been discussed before, and several basic arguments against giving delegates this authority remain persuasive to me."

Somewhat to Foley's embarrassment, the research on legal precedents turned up this comment from him during the 1970 debate on letting Puerto Rico's resident commissioner vote in House committees: "Now it is very clear, as the resident commissioner has said, that a constitutional amendment would be required to give the resident commissioner a vote in the committee of the whole or the full House."

Asked about that comment this week, Foley's spokesman Biggs said simply: "He's changed his mind."

Republicans make other arguments. The one-man-one-vote principle is basic to the apportionment of House seats, they note. But while the average member of the House represents 519,235 people, American Samoa's delegate has only 32,395 constituents, Virgin Islands' 95,214, and Guam's 105,816. Residents of those territories and Puerto Rico pay taxes into territorial treasuries, but not to the U.S. Treasury.

With Clinton hoping for a smooth start next month and even some bipartisan support for his key economic measures, Foley is not eager for a knockdown fight with the Republicans about this issue. He knows some of his own moderate and conservative Democrats have qualms about the move. But he is under pressure from Norton and other liberals not to back down.

The search is on for a compromise but, as with much bigger issues that will come along after Clinton's Inaugural, the Speaker is walking a tightrope.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time remaining on this side to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR], the majority whip.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to commend the gentlewoman from New York [Ms. SLAUGHTER] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER] for putting together this rules package. They took a lot of time, they spent a lot of long hours, and they did yeoman work, and we thank them very much.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to address the issue of Delegate voting since it has been the subject of much of the debate today. What we have before us is really a very reasonable compromise which safeguards the constitutional prerogatives of Members and gives at the same time the Delegates a chance to participate in a meaningful way in our deliberations.

Mr. Speaker, the right of Delegates to vote in House committees was decided over 20 years ago, and for several years now both Republican and Democrat Delegates, Republicans and Democrats, have urged us to apply this same standard to the largest committee of all, the Committee of the Whole. Some say it is a postelection power grab, even though one of the original proponents was a Republican from Guam, and Republicans from some other territories are now in support of the proposal that we are offering. They say it violates the principle of one man, one vote, even though population has never, never been a criterion for Delegates voting in the House committees, nor for territories entering the Union.

I want to set aside some of the legalistic constitutional arguments because I think this goes beyond those issues. There is a moral dimension here as well.

Mr. Speaker, last spring I was privileged to partake in ceremonies commemorating the 10th anniversary of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial. That wall has become a symbol for national reconciliation. But today's vote shows us the reconciliation is not complete for there are citizens of Guam on that wall, yet there are those of us who would prevent the representatives of Guam from voting. There are citizens from Puerto Rico on that wall. Yet there are those who would prevent representatives from Puerto Rico from voting. There are many citizens of the District of Columbia on that wall, from American Samoa on that wall, from the Virgin Islands on that wall, and there are those who would prevent their representatives from expressing their voice, not in the House, but in the Committee of the Whole.

Are we to say to their survivors, Mr. Speaker, that those soldiers were good enough to fight and to die for their country but not good enough to be represented here? Are we to say to those survivors and their families, "We appreciate your sacrifice, but we can note it only on a monument, not in the Committee of the House of Representatives?"

Mr. Speaker, they fought for our country, they died for our country, and, by God, as my colleagues know, the gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. ABERCROMBIE] eloquently stated it on the floor, that if Denmark can do it for their territories, if France can do it, if Mexico can do it, if Spain can do it, we can do it. They do not stop in the Committee of the Whole. They grant the privilege of voting for all.

□ 1650

All we are asking here today is that you provide them a step forward. My district borders on Canada. I can pick up a paper and see that the Yukon Territory is represented in Ottawa and is voting; not in committee, but voting on law. Nobody objects.

Mr. Speaker, our delegates have voted in committees for over 20 years. Let us give them and the people they represent this one small move forward that they have asked for, to vote in the Committee of the Whole. They deserve it. Let us say this to these people who have given so much to our country: we want them represented, not only on monuments to their brave dead, but in the decisions which determine the future of the living.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to vote for the previous question, against the motion to recommit, and, finally, for this package.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Speaker, the Democrat power grab to dilute the strength of the 10 Republican seats gained in the House last November will not stand. Your party, Mr. Speaker, is not satisfied with regaining the White House. The Democrat leadership wants more and more power to push its liberal agenda on the American people.

I will strongly oppose giving Delegates from U.S. territories—all of whom are Democrats—the right to vote on all substantive legislation on the House floor. It is simply not fair.

I am sensitive to the issue of taxing the residents of the District of Columbia without giving them the right to vote. I would gladly allow the non-Federal portions of the District of Columbia to reincorporate back into Maryland.

But to solve this problem by granting all Delegates the right to vote on the House floor goes totally in the wrong direction. Some of these delegates represent small populations. For example, the U.S. Virgin Islands and American Samoa have populations of less than 50,000 people each. The average congressional district has more than 10 times the populations of these territories.

In addition, none of the people in these U.S. territories—except the District of Columbia—pay taxes to the U.S. Treasury. In other words, the Democrat-controlled Congress wants to give the right of representation to people who don't even pay taxes. That means taxpaying citizens in the 50 States will have their voting strength diluted if the House adopts the rules as proposed by the Democrat leadership in Congress. Mr. Speaker, a revolution was fought over this very same principle.

Mr. Speaker, may I respectfully remind you of your own words back in 1970 when Congress debated allowing a Delegate from Puerto Rico to have a seat in the House. You said that it would take a constitutional amendment to allow this new Delegate the right to vote either before the full House or in the Committee of the Whole. That position was good then—why do you reverse yourself today?

Also, many respected constitutional scholars and editorialists such as George Will, David Broder, and the editorial board of the New York Times and the Chicago Tribune, have written against such a power grab. All have called for a constitutional amendment to allow Delegates the right to vote on substantive matters before the House. Do we ignore such counsel, especially as this matter will soon be litigated before the Federal courts if this rule is adopted?

Finally, many States lost representation in Congress, including my home State of Illinois, during the last census. Why should U.S. territories be given such voting privileges when States like Illinois have a smaller congressional delegation? It is intolerable.

To my fellow Democrat Members from the Illinois delegation, I plead for reason and sanity. We accepted the verdict of the Census Bureau—let's not further dilute the strength of our delegation by allowing this rule to pass to give the right to vote to delegates from U.S. territories.

The leadership of the Democrat-controlled Congress should at least have the intellectual integrity to offer a constitutional amendment to allow delegates the right to vote—not by this underhanded power grab that is designed solely to dilute the voting strength of every Member of Congress and the people of the 16th District of Illinois.

The plain truth is that because Republicans gained 10 seats last November, the Democrats are trying to undo the electoral process by this parliamentary rule change. I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to oppose this purely political tactic.

Mrs. MINK. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to my colleagues oppose an amendment to rule XII of the rules of the House, which proposes to allow Delegates to vote in the Committee of the Whole. The basis for my colleagues' strident opposition to this rule change—the supposed inequity wreaked by giving Delegates a vote in the Committee of the Whole while the territories they represent fail to pay Federal taxes—is erroneous.

Mr. Speaker, I am, therefore, compelled to rise and instruct my colleagues on an historical act of Congress—an act of this same body that established the tax structure that the territories are bound by.

The territories, in no uncertain terms, are bound by U.S. tax laws. Granted, the territories occupy a unique position as a result of ambivalent U.S. fiscal policy; however, the territories occupy such a position by the will of Congress.

The Congress, in meeting its trust obligation and in attempting to encourage fiscal autonomy, decreed that each of the territories be granted the proceeds from the application of certain U.S. internal revenue laws.

The United States Government relinquished a part of its income tax jurisdiction to the territories, allowing U.S. citizens who reside in the territories to file a tax return in the territory instead of with the Federal Government. Under Federal law, these territories are required to administer the U.S. income tax laws as their local income tax system—the mirror system of taxation. And certain other U.S. taxes paid into the Federal Treasury are transferred to the territorial treasuries to ensure their well-being.

Therefore, I am appalled at my colleagues who argue that the proposed amendment to rule XII of the rules of the House should be opposed because the territories don't contribute to the Federal Treasury. I find this argument not only incorrect but also dishonest.

If there is to be opposition to this rule change, let it be honest opposition: Let it be opposition that argues differences firmly rooted in fact. The misinformation I have heard being argued on the floor of the U.S. House of Representatives is specious and irresponsible, and must not go uncorrected.

Mr. Speaker, this Congress has the authority to enact legislation changing the tax system the territories are bound by, just as this Congress in past years, created the tax system the territories are currently bound by. Let this Congress have more integrity than to argue that the laws enacted by this body and applied to the territories by the will of this body are a sound basis for denying the Delegates representing those territories a vote in the Committee of the Whole.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. EDWARDS of California). The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

MOTION TO COMMIT OFFERED BY MR. MICHEL

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to commit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MICHEL moves to commit the resolution H. Res. 5 to a select committee comprised of the Majority Leader and the Minority Leader with instructions to report back the same to the House forthwith with only the following amendments:

(1) Strike paragraphs (9), (13), and (14) (relating to allowing the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico and the Delegates from the District of Columbia, Guam, the Virgin Islands and American Samoa, to vote in and preside over the Committee of the Whole), and redesignate other paragraphs accordingly; and

(2) At the end of the resolution, add the following new paragraph:

(18) In rule X, clause 6(c) is amended by inserting after the first sentence the following: "The terms of the chairman and ranking minority member of each standing committee shall not exceed three consecutive Congresses, beginning with the One Hundred Third Congress.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to commit.

There was no objection.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, since that motion to commit contains instructions to report back two amendments, is it true that with the motion to commit, if adopted, the House will then have an opportunity to vote separately on the two amendments, the first amendment being to delete Delegate voting, and the second amendment to put term limits on chairmen and ranking members, two separate votes? Is that correct?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct, if the motion is agreed to. The motion to commit is not itself invisible.

Mr. SOLOMON. I thank the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to commit offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL].

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 187, nays 238, not voting 6, as follows:

AUTHORIZING U.S. SECRET SERVICE TO CONTINUE PROTECTION TO FORMER VICE PRESIDENT OR HIS SPOUSE

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 2) to authorize the U.S. Secret Service to continue to furnish protection to the former Vice President or his spouse, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 2

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That—

(1) the United States Secret Service, in addition to other duties now provided by law, is authorized to furnish protection to—

(A) the person occupying the Office of Vice President of the United States immediately preceding January 20, 1993, or

(B) his spouse,

if the President determines that such person may thereafter be in significant danger; and

(2) protection of any such person, pursuant to the authority provided in paragraph (1), shall continue only for such period as the President determines, except that such protection shall not continue beyond July 20, 1993, unless otherwise permitted by law.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, this is the customary resolution which the Congress passes to authorize the extension of Secret Service protection to the soon to be former Vice President of the United States or his spouse as they return to private life. If the President determines that the Vice President or his spouse may be in significant danger, the resolution authorizes the Secret Service to protect the former Vice President or his spouse for 6 months after he leaves office.

Passage of such a resolution has been the practice of the Congress in those situations where the Vice President will no longer be in a position where he is accorded Secret Service protection. This extension of protection is to assist the Vice President in his transition from public office to private life.

I urge the adoption of the resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INAUGURAL CEREMONIES OF THE PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 10) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 10

Resolved, That at 10:30 ante meridiem on Wednesday, January 20, 1993, the House shall proceed to the West Front of the Capitol for the purpose of attending the inaugural ceremonies of the President and Vice President of the United States.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING THE SPEAKER TO DECLARE RECESSES ON WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 6, 1993

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order for the Speaker to declare recesses on Wednesday, January 6, 1993, subject to the call of the Chair, for the purpose of preparing for the joint session to count the electoral votes for President and Vice President.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how does this recess authority that the gentleman has in this motion differ from the recess authority that we just passed in the rules?

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentlemen from Missouri.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the Speaker already has recess authority. We are simply reminding Members that recesses may be called on Wednesday for the purpose of dealing with the electoral count.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, that is what I am trying to understand. It seems to me, if I read the rules correctly, the Speaker already has his authority. I do not understand why we are taking action on the floor to give the Speaker power that he already has.

Mr. GEPHARDT. If the gentleman would yield, Mr. Speaker, we were simply doing it to inform Members that this activity is going to take place tomorrow. It is a reiteration of the authority he already has.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT].

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING ON TOMORROW

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at noon tomorrow, Wednesday, January 6, 1993.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair customarily takes this occasion on the opening day of a Congress to announce his policies with respect to particular aspects of the legislative process. On behalf of the Speaker, the Chair will insert in the RECORD announcements by the Speaker concerning: First, privileges of the floor; second, introduction of bills and resolutions; third, unanimous consent requests for the consideration of bills and resolutions; fourth, recognition for 1-minute speeches and special orders; fifth, decorum in debate; sixth, conduct of votes by electronic device; and seventh, appointment of conferees. These announcements where appropriate indicate verbatim the origins of the stated policies and the dates thereof. The Speaker intends to continue in the 103d Congress the policies reflected in these statements. The policy announced in prior Congresses with respect to requests for committees to sit during the 5-minute rule is no longer pertinent. The policy announced in the previous Congress with respect to jurisdictional concepts related to clause 5(b) of rule XXI—tax and tariff measures—will continue to govern but need not be reiterated, as it will be adequately documented as precedent in the House rules and manual.

POLICIES OF THE CHAIR

January 5, 1993

1. PRIVILEGES OF THE FLOOR

The Speaker's announced instructions to the Doorkeeper and Sergeant at Arms in the 98th Congress on January 25, 1983, and in the 99th Congress on January 21, 1986, regarding strict enforcement of rule XXXII, specifying those persons having the privileges of the floor during sessions of the House, will be applied during the 103d Congress.

Announcement by the Speaker, January 25, 1983

The SPEAKER. Rule XXXII strictly limits those persons to whom the privileges of the floor during sessions of the House are extended, and that rule prohibits the Chair from entertaining requests for suspension or waiver of that rule. As reiterated as recently as August 22, 1974, by Speaker Albert under the principle stated in Deschler's Procedure, chapter 4, section 3.4, the rule strictly limits the number of committee staff permitted on the floor at one time during the consideration of measures reported from their committees. This permission does not extend to Members' personal staff except when a Member has an amendment actually pending during the 5-minute rule. To this end, the Chair requests all Members and committee staff to cooperate to assure that not more than the proper number of staff are on the floor, and then only during the actual consideration of measures reported from their committees. The Chair will again extend this admonition to all properly admitted majority and minority staff by insisting that their presence on the floor, including the areas behind the rail, be restricted to those periods during which their supervisors have specifically requested their presence. The Chair stated this policy in the 97th Congress, and an increasing number of Members have insisted on strict enforcement of the rule. The Chair has consulted with and has the concurrence of the Minority Leader with respect to this policy and has directed the Doorkeeper and the Sergeant at Arms to assure proper enforcement of the rule.

Announcement by the Speaker, January 21, 1986

The SPEAKER. Rule XXXII strictly limits those persons to whom the privileges of the floor during sessions of the House are extended, and that rule prohibits the Chair from entertaining request for suspension or waiver of that rule. as reiterated by the Chair on January 25, 1983, and January 3, 1985, and as stated in chapter 4, section 3.4 of Deschler-Brown's Procedure in the House of Representatives, the rule strictly limits the number of committee staff on the floor at one time during the consideration of measures reported from their committees. This permission does not extend to Members' personal staff except when a Member's amendment is actually pending during the 5-minute rule. It also does not extend to personal staff of Members who are sponsors of pending bills or who are engaging in special orders. The Chair requests the cooperation of all Members and committee staff to assure that only the proper number of staff are on the floor, and then only during the consideration of measures reported from their committees. The Chair is making this statement and reiterating this policy because of concerns expressed by many Members about the number of committee staff on the floor during the last weeks of the first session. The Chair requests each chairman, and each ranking minority member, to submit to the Doorkeeper a list of staff who are to be allowed on the floor during the consideration of a measure reported by their committee. Each staff person should exchange his or her ID for a "committee staff" badge which is to be worn while on the floor. The Chair has consulted with the Minority Leader and will continue to consult with him. The Chair has furthermore directed the Doorkeeper and the Sergeant at Arms to assure proper enforcement of rule XXXII.

2. INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

The Speaker's statement in the 98th Congress on January 3, 1983, regarding the signing of bills and resolutions, his determination of committee jurisdiction on a joint or sequential basis, and his discretionary authority to refer nongermane Senate amendments to House bills to the committees of appropriate jurisdiction, will continue to apply in the 103d Congress.

Announcement by the Speaker, January 3, 1983

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to make a statement concerning the introduction and reference of bills and resolutions. As Members are aware, they have the privilege today of introducing bills. Heretofore on the opening day of a new Congress, several hundred bills have been introduced. The Chair will do his best to refer as many bills as possible, but he will ask the indulgence of Members if he is unable to refer all the bills that may be introduced. Those bills which are not referred and do not appear in the RECORD as of today will be included in the next day's RECORD and printed with a date as of today.

The Chair has advised all officers and employees of the House that are involved in the processing of bills that every bill, resolution, memorial petition or other material that is placed in the hopper must bear the signature of a Member. Where a bill or resolution is jointly sponsored, the signature must be that of the Member first named thereon. The bill clerk is instructed to return to the Member any bill which appears in the hopper without an original signature. This procedure was inaugurated in the 92d Congress. It has worked well, and the Chair thinks that it is essential to continue this practice to insure the integrity of the process by which legislation is introduced in the House. The Chair also desires to announce that, pursuant to the authority granted him in clause 5 of rule X, he will continue the practice of making referral of bills and resolutions as indicated in the annotations under that clause contained in the House Rules and manual.

3. UNANIMOUS-CONSENT REQUESTS FOR THE CONSIDERATION OF BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

The Speaker's policy with respect to recognition for unanimous-consent requests for the consideration of unreported bills and resolutions and for the consideration of House bills with Senate amendments, as initially announced in the 98th Congress on January 25 and April 26, 1984, will apply during the 103d Congress.

Announcement by the Speaker, January 25, 1984

The SPEAKER. As indicated [in section 757] of the House Rules and Manual, the Chair has established a policy of conferring recognition upon Members to permit consideration of bills and resolutions by unanimous consent only when assured that the majority and minority floor leadership and committee and subcommittee chairmen and ranking minority members have no objection. Consistent with that policy, and with the Chair's inherent power of recognition under clause 2 of rule XIV, the Chair, and any occupant of the Chair appointed as Speaker pro tempore pursuant to clause 7 of rule I, will decline recognition for unanimous consent requests for consideration of bills and resolutions without assurances that the request has been cleared by that leadership. This denial of recognition by the Chair will not reflect necessarily any personal opposition on the part of the Chair to orderly consideration of the matter in question, but will reflect the determination upon the part of the chair that orderly procedures will be followed; that is, procedures involving consultation and agreement between floor and committee leadership on both sides of the aisle.

Announcement by the Speaker, April 26, 1984

The SPEAKER. With respect to unanimous consent requests to dispose of Senate amendments to House bills on the Speaker's table, the Chair will entertain such a request only if made by the chairman of the committee with jurisdiction, or by another committee member authorized to make the request.

4. RECOGNITION FOR 1-MINUTE SPEECHES AND SPECIAL ORDERS

The Speaker's statement in the 98th Congress on January 25, 1984 with respect to the Speaker's policy for recognition for 1-minute speeches and special orders, alternating between both sides of the aisle, announced on August 8, 1984, and implemented on September 5, 1984, will apply during the 103d Congress.

Announcement by the Speaker, August 8, 1984

The SPEAKER. After consultation with and concurrence by the Minority Leader, the Chair announces that he will institute a new policy of recognition for "1-minute" speeches and for special order requests. The Chair will alternate recognition for 1-minute speeches between majority and minority Members, in the order in which they seek recognition in the well under present practice from the Chair's right to the Chair's left, with possible exceptions for Members of the leadership and Members having business requests. The Chair, of course, reserves the right to limit 1-minute speeches to a certain period of time or to a special place in the program on any given day, with notice to the leadership.

With respect to recognition for "special order speeches" at the end of legislative business of the day, the Chair will recognize first those Members who wish to address the House for 5 minutes or less, alternating between majority and minority Members, otherwise in the order in which those permissions were granted in the House. Thereafter, the Chair will recognize those Members who wish to address the House for longer than 5 minutes up to 1 hour, alternating between majority and minority Members in the order in which those permissions were granted by the House.

Thus, all Members can continue to obtain permissions to address the House in the same ways as are presently utilized, either by requests made by the acting majority and minority leaders at the end of the day through their respective Cloakrooms or by individual requests agreed to on the floor for that day or for a future day. For the request to be entertained, it should state "permission to address the House at the conclusion of legislative business, consistent with the Speaker's announced policy of recognition." Thus, Members should be on notice that a special order for more than 5 minutes, although agreed to at a prior time, nay be preceded by a series of special orders of 5 minutes or less, or by a longer special order of a Member of the other party.

Further refinements of this policy based upon experience may be announced by the Chair in the future after consultation with the Minority Leader.

5. DECORUM IN DEBATE

It is essential that the dignity of the proceedings of the House be preserved, not only to assure that the House conducts its business in an orderly fashion but to permit Members to properly comprehend and participate in the business of the House. To this end, and in order to permit the Chair to understand and to correctly put the question on the numerous requests that are made by Members, the Chair requests that Members and others who have the privileges of the floor desist from audible conversation in the Chamber while the business of the House is being conducted. The Chair would encourage all Members to review rule XIV to gain a better understanding of the proper rules of decorum expected of them, and especially: First, to avoid "personalities" in debate with respect to references to other Members, the Senate, and the President; second, to address the Chair while standing and only when and not beyond the time recognized, and not to address the television or other imagined audience; third, to refrain from passing between the Chair and the Member speaking, or directly in front of a Member speaking from the well; fourth, to refrain from smoking in the Chamber; and generally to display the same degree of respect to the Chair and other Members that every Member is due.

6. CONDUCT OF VOTES BY ELECTRONIC DEVICE

The Speaker's statement in the 102d Congress on January 3, 1991, with respect to the conduct of votes by electronic device, will apply during the 103d Congress. That statement is set forth in full, below. The Speaker notes that despite this announced policy, inordinate delays continued throughout the 102d Congress. On one occasion last October 30, 1991, the Chair strictly enforced this policy during consideration of a bill under a special rule that established an overall time limitation for consideration, which included recorded votes. Members appreciated and cooperated with the Chair's enforcement of the policy on that occasion.

Members will likewise appreciate that in the 103d Congress the Speaker is advising the cloakrooms that they should not forward to the Chair individual requests to hold open a vote by electronic device, but should simply apprise inquiring Members of the time remaining on the voting clock.

Announcement by the Speaker, January 3, 1991

The SPEAKER. As Members are aware, clause 5 of rule XV provides that "Members shall have not less than fifteen minutes from the ordering of the roll call or quorum call to have their vote or presence recorded."

While the rule obviously states a minimum, rather than maximum, time requirement for electronic votes, and while no occupant of the chair would attempt to prevent a Member who is in the chamber at the expiration of that time from casting his or her vote, the Chair has noticed that in the past session inordinate delays in concluding electronic votes or quorum calls would occur when Members would notify the Chair through the cloakrooms that they were on their way to the chamber from a variety of locations.

The Chair would encourage all Members to depart for the Chamber promptly upon the appropriate bell and light signal, since there is no guarantee that Members can rely upon telephoned notice to the cloakrooms in order to have votes held open. As indicated by his remarks on this subject on October 13, 1990, the Minority Leader joins the Chair in urging all Members to help avoid the unnecessary loss of time in conducting the business of the House.

7. APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES

The Speaker's statements in the 102d Congress on January 3, 1991, and June 3, 1992, with respect to the Speaker's appointment of conferees, will apply during the 103d Congress.

Announcement by the Speaker, January 3, 1991

Consistent with clause 6 of rule X, the Chair intends to develop and implement a policy that would enable him to the fullest extent feasible to simplify the appointment of conferees.

Announcement by the Speaker, June 3, 1992

On the opening day of the 102d Congress, the Chair announced that "consistent with clause 6 of rule X, the Chair intends to develop and implement a policy that would enable him to the fullest extent feasible to simplify the appointment of conferees."

As the Chair is about to announce his appointment of conferees from more than one committee in the second session, and based upon the Chair's additional experience with complicated conference appointments in the first session notwithstanding his opening day announcement, the Chair will remind Members that conference committees are after all select committees in the sense that they go out of existence when their report is filed. The appointment by the Chair of various groups of conferees in the context of the particular House and Senate provisions sent to conference should not be construed as precedent binding the Speaker to subsequent joint referrals of all bills amending the work product of that particular conference.

EXPRESSING SORROW AT THE DEATH OF FORMER COLLEAGUE, THE HONORABLE RICHARD ICHORD

(Mr. SKELTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I announce the death of our former colleague, Richard Ichord. He passed away Christmas morning.

Dick Ichord served 10 terms in Congress from 1961 to 1981. He was a true patriot, and he was known as a supporter of efforts to maintain our national security and a strong military. As a member of the House Armed Services Committee, he was a champion of a key military base in the district I represent today.

□ 1810

As he prepared to leave Congress in 1980, he said, "Diplomatic power doesn't mean anything without the military power to back it up."

But he was perhaps best known for his 6-year tenure as chairman of the House Unamerican Activities Committee and the subsequent Internal Security Committee. While fighting the elimination of the committee in 1975, he warned against America letting its guard down on intelligence and national security matters.

A native of Licking, MO, he was a native veteran of World War II, and earned bachelor's degrees and law degrees from the University of Missouri at Columbia.

After serving four terms in the Missouri House of Representatives, including one term as Speaker, he was elected to the House in 1960.

Dick Ichord will be missed by his former colleagues and his many friends throughout our country and throughout Missouri. He is survived by his son, Richard H. Ichord III, of Houston, MO, a daughter, Mrs. Pam Ehlers of Nevada, MO. and three grandchildren.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SKELTON. I yield to my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SKELTON]. I attended last Tuesday a week ago the funeral of Dick Ichord in Houston, MO. It was a very moving ceremony, one which I think spoke very highly of the service that Dick Ichord rendered over the years as a private citizen and as a public servant. His loss is untimely, and we will, all of us who knew him, miss him.

Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleague, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SKELTON], in extending condolences to his entire family, and join him in saying to the House that we will reserve at some appropriate time a period in a special order in which other colleagues who wish to say a word in memory of Dick Ichord may have an opportunity to express themselves.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I would like to announce that there will be a memorial ceremony for the late Dick Ichord on Thursday at 4 o'clock in the Armed Services Committee room, 2118 in the Rayburn Building. We hope that his friends will remember and be at the memorial service.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I am today reintroducing my health care reform bill which has as its core and its essence the reduction of cost of health care across the Nation. One hundred fifty pages does this bill have, and all of the provisions therein lead to, if enacted, a steady reduction in the cost to our taxpayers, to our patients, to everyone involved in the health care system, a reduction in their costs.

Mr. Speaker, that is the important thing. We have just learned that the Commerce Department's latest figures show a whopping escalation of costs to the American people in health care of some 11.5 percent over the previous year. This takes a great big gulp out of our national product, and thus makes everything worse as we grope to try to improve the economy.

Mr. Speaker, our health care reform bill has in it short-term reforms and long-term reforms. The very best that can be said is that it does not change the current system, but improves it to the extent that the American people will approve it themselves.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

WASHINGTON, DC,
January 5, 1993.

Hon. THOMAS S. FOLEY,
The Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Under Clause 4 of Rule III of the Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives, I herewith designate Mr. W. Raymond Colley, Deputy Clerk, to sign any and all papers and do all other acts for me under the name of the Clerk of the House which he would be authorized to do by virtue of this designation, except such as are provided by statute, in case of my temporary absence of disability.

If Mr. Colley should not be able to act in my behalf for any reason, then Mr. Dallas L. Dendy, Jr., Assistant to the Clerk or Mr. William R. Long, Assistant to the Clerk should similarly perform such duties under the same conditions as are authorized by this designation.

These designations shall remain in effect for the 103rd Congress or until modified by me.

With great respect, I am
Sincerely yours,
DONNALD K. ANDERSON,
Clerk, U.S. House of Representatives.

FAMILY AND MEDICAL LEAVE ACT

(Mr. REED asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, on January 3, 1990, I spoke my first words on the floor of this House. I urged my colleagues to support the Family and Medical Leave Act. I hope that this is the last time I will have to rise at the beginning of a congressional session to urge action on this much needed legislation.

Last year, despite overwhelming support by the American people, we were stymied by a Presidential veto.

Today, the Family and Medical Leave Act was reintroduced today as H.R. 1. It is my hope that, under the leadership of President-elect Clinton, the 103d Congress will be able to pass this important piece of legislation into law.

My State of Rhode Island now has State family leave legislation in place, legislation that I worked to pass there and am proud to support here. In Rhode Island, we have found that leave statutes are not difficult to implement, especially for companies that have experience in managing leave; that companies do not reduce other benefits; and that formal leave statutes help all companies introduce formal, written policies.

It is time to extend this policy nationwide.

Right now, American workers have no job protection under Federal law when they have a family or medical emergency. Family and medical leave is not a privilege, it's a right for the citizens of every industrialized country except the United States and South Africa. Working Americans should not be forced to choose between keeping their jobs and caring for a baby, sick child or parent in failing health.

H.R. 13, THE TAX SIMPLIFICATION ACT OF 1993

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing H.R. 13, the Tax Simplification Act of 1993. This bill simplifies over 100 different provisions of the tax laws, including provisions relating to the earned income tax credit, intangible assets, pensions, individuals, partnerships, international taxation, tax-exempt bonds, estates and gifts, and a wide variety of other tax provisions.

This bill is long overdue. All of its provisions passed the House in the 102d Congress, and most of them were included last year in both H.R. 4210 and H.R. 11, the two major tax bills that were vetoed by President Bush.

All of these simplification provisions are the product of a major initiative that I announced nearly 3 years ago to simplify the tax laws. In February 1990, I requested the interested public, tax professionals, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the congressional tax-writing staffs to develop tax simplification proposals that would make life easier for the taxpaying public, return preparers, tax administrators, and the courts, without undoing major policy objectives or increasing the deficit. In response, I received hundreds of proposals that were eventually published in an 1,100-page Ways and Means Committee print.

At my direction, these simplification proposals were thoroughly analyzed by the congressional tax-writing staffs with the cooperation of the Treasury Department and the Internal Revenue Service. In 1991, I introduced several bills reflecting their collective recommendations regarding these various proposals. Subsequently, the Ways and Means Committee and the Subcommittee on Select Revenue Measures held public hearings on these various bills. The vast majority of the provisions contained in this bill were favorably reported by the Committee on Ways and Means in the 102d Congress.

The bill that I am introducing today generally mirrors the simplification provisions that were contained in the conference agreement to H.R. 11. Since their initial introduction some 2 years ago, these provisions have been perfected through the legislative process of hearings, committee action, and conference action. I am open, however, to consideration of further improvements to these provisions.

In particular, one of the most significant provisions in this legislation would simplify the tax treatment of acquired intangible assets, by assigning them a uniform 14-year life. There is widespread agreement that this provision would eliminate a major source of enormous uncertainty and controversy in the tax laws. I am reintroducing the version of this legislation that was contained in the conference agreement to H.R. 11 in acknowledgment of the hard-fought political compromises that it reflects. I believe, however, that the provision could be improved to make it even more meaningful and equitable, and I anticipate that in the 103d Congress there will be an opportunity to consider such improvements.

No revenue estimate is currently available for this package of tax simplification. I fully intend, however, to finance or modify this package as may be necessary to comply with the pay-as-you-go budget requirements.

In the past, I have stated repeatedly that I do not expect these provisions to be the end all, be all of tax simplification. Rather, they are an important first step in what for me is a long-term commitment to simplify the tax laws. I am heartened by the progress that this legislation reflects and by the support that it has garnered. It has been questioned whether there is any constituency for tax simplification that does not represent tax relief for specific industries. This legislation proves that there is a constituency for broad-based tax simplification. In the 103d Congress, I will continue to solicit proposals to simplify the Tax Code with the hope of processing additional legislation to accomplish that goal.

A technical explanation of the bill, prepared by the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation in consultation with the tax staff of the Committee on Ways and Means, will be available in the near future.

STATEMENT OF INTRODUCTION FOR H.R. 16

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, half a century ago, my father introduced into the House a bill providing for a program of national health insurance. In each of the past 17 Congresses I have introduced this bill, both as a testament to the wisdom of the 1943 Murray-Wagner-Dingell bill and as a hopeful harbinger of an enlightened change in our Nation's approach to health care.

In almost every decade since, save the 1980's, hopes were high that such a program might be enacted. Today, with the election of Bill Clinton, those hopes are again raised, and with good reason.

This bill contains the seeds of the indispensable elements of a national plan: universal coverage, limits on spending, malpractice reform and a financing system that puts competitiveness first. Those elements are also part of a more modern comprehensive proposal for health reform, the health choice plan, which I developed last year and introduced with Congressman HENRY WAXMAN. We are withholding reintroduction of that legislation out of deference to our new President and to his commitment to health care reform. We are confident that Bill Clinton will give the Congress and the American people a plan that incorporates the best of each of the bills previously introduced. We look to the incoming President with anticipation and pride and with a spirit of cooperation.

For almost 40 years, the introduction of this bill has reminded us of the justice, wisdom and necessity of national health insurance. The consequences of our inaction are apparent. No more families need be ruined, more industries torn apart for our imperatives to be clear. Let us move forward, with the lessons of history as our guide, to finally enact national health insurance.

TRUE LINE-ITEM VETO BILL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing, with over 30 House cosponsors, the Legislative Line Item Veto Act of 1993—a true line-item veto bill.

I emphasize that this is a true line-item veto bill because, unlike an alternative being touted by the Speaker, this would ultimately require a two-thirds vote of both Houses to block a President's line-item rescission of all or part of the budget authority for matters contained in appropriations bills.

Under my proposal, which would be effective for all appropriations bills in fiscal years 1994 and 1995, the President could propose a rescission or cancellation of budget authority for all or part of any item contained in any regular, supplemental or continuing appropriations bill. Congress would then have 20 days in which both Houses, by majority vote, could pass a bill or joint resolution to disapprove the rescission. The President would then have 10 days in which to sign or veto the disapproval bill. Since he is likely to veto any bill disapproving his proposed rescissions, it would then take a two-thirds vote of both Houses under the Constitution, to override the veto and force the money to be spent.

Mr. Speaker, candidate Clinton said he was for a line-item veto. He should not be fooled into thinking that the expedited rescission approach being put forward by the Speaker is a true line-item veto. To the contrary, it is simply the current rescission approval approach under the Budget Act under a compressed time frame with mandatory votes on rescission proposals.

Since it would take a law enacted by Congress and signed by the President to cancel spending, a majority of either House could force the money to be spent by voting against a rescission approval bill. Put another way, as few as 51 Senators could block the President's spending cut proposals.

Mr. Speaker, my approach is what the CRS calls enhanced rescission authority as opposed to mere expedited rescission authority. The President's powers are enhanced because my bill reverses the current rescission approval approach in the Budget Act to a rescission disapproval approach. And that is what leads to the ultimate requirement that two-thirds of both Houses must override a President's line-item veto to permit the spending to go forward.

Mr. Speaker, last year I attempted to offer this approach to several appropriations bills, and we unfortunately lost on procedural votes on the rules involved. This year it is my intention to offer this initially as an amendment to the debt limit bill since I think we need this and other fiscal disciplines before we can approve any further increase in the debt limit. I urge my colleagues who have not yet done so to cosponsor this bill.

At this point in the RECORD, Mr. Speaker, I include a summary and the text of my bill, a press statement I issued in November, and a letter I sent to President-elect Clinton. The items follow:

COSPONSORS

Mr. Allard, Mr. Bachus of Alabama, Mr. Barrett of Nebraska, Mr. Boehner, Mr. Burton of Indiana, Mr. Dreier, Mr. Duncan, Ms. Fowler, Mr. Gallegly, Mr. Gillmor, Mr. Hall of Texas, Mr. Houghton, Mr. Hunter, Mr. Sam Johnson of Texas, Mr. Lewis of Florida, Mr. McCandless, Mr. McHugh, Mr. Michel, Ms. Molinari, Mr. Oxley, Mr. Packard, Mr. Quillen, Mr. Ramstad, Mr. Rohrabacher, Mr. Schiff, Mr. Sensenbrenner, Mr. Smith of Texas, Mr. Stump, Mr. Sundquist, Mr. Upton, Mr. Walker, Mr. Walsh, and Mr. Zeliff.

SUMMARY OF LEGISLATIVE LINE-ITEM VETO ACT OF 1992

The bill is based on H.R. 78 introduced by Rep. Jimmy Duncan (R–TN) on Jan. 3, 1991 (referred to the Committees on Rules and Government Operations; 124 current cosponsors), except that it would only apply to fiscal 1993 appropriations bills;

Under the terms of the bill, the President could send Congress a special message within 20 calendar days after the enactment of a fiscal 1993 appropriations bill, rescinding all or part of any discretionary budget authority contained in that bill;

The budget authority would be considered canceled unless both Houses, by majority vote, pass a joint resolution disapproving the rescission, in whole, within 20 days of session after the message is received, and the joint resolution becomes law;

After congressional passage of a joint resolution of disapproval, the President would have the constitutional ten days in which to sign or veto it, and, if it is vetoed, Congress would have an additional five days of session in which to vote to override the veto (a two-thirds vote of both Houses being required under the Constitution);

A joint resolution of disapproval would be subject to ten hours of debate in the Senate and in accordance with the rules of the House, and would not be subject to amendment in either House;

If Congress adjourns its final session sine die before the expiration of the 20-day review period, the rescission would not take effect, but the message shall be deemed to have been resubmitted on the first day of the new Congress.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "The Legislative Line Item Veto Act of 1993".

SEC. 2. LEGISLATIVE LINE ITEM VETO RESCISSION AUTHORITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding the provisions of part B of title X of The Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, and subject to the provisions of this section, the President may rescind all or part of any discretionary budget authority for fiscal years 1994 and 1995 which is subject to the terms of this Act if the President—

(1) determines that—

(A) such rescission would help balance the Federal budget, reduce the Federal budget deficit, or reduce the public debt;

(B) such rescission will not impair any essential Government functions;

(C) such rescission will not harm the national interest; and

(D) such rescission will directly contribute to the purpose of this Act of limiting discretionary spending in fiscal years 1994 or 1995, as the case may be; and

(2) notifies the Congress of such rescission by a special message not later than 20 calendar days (not including Saturdays, Sundays, or holidays) after the date of enactment of a regular or supplemental appropriations act for fiscal year 1994 or 1995 or a joint resolution making continuing appropriations providing such budget authority for fiscal year 1994 or 1995, as the case may be.

The President shall submit a separate rescission message for each appropriations bill under this paragraph.

SEC 3. RESCISSION EFFECTIVE UNLESS DISAPPROVED.

(a) Any amount of budget authority rescinded under this Act as set forth in a special message by the President shall be deemed canceled unless during the period described in subsection (b), a rescission disapproval bill making available all of the amount rescinded is enacted into law.

(b) The period referred to in subsection (a) is—

(1) a congressional review period of 20 calendar days of session during which Congress must complete action on the rescission disapproval bill and present such bill to the President for approval or disapproval;

(2) after the period provided in paragraph (1), an additional 10 days (not including Sundays) during which the President may exercise his authority to sign or veto the rescission disapproval bill; and

(3) if the President vetoes the rescission disapproval bill during the period provided in paragraph (2), an additional 5 calendar days of session after the date of the veto.

(c) If a special message is transmitted by the President under this Act and the last session of the Congress adjourns sine die before the expiration of the period described in subsection (b), the rescission shall not take effect. The message shall be deemed to have been retransmitted on the first day of the succeeding Congress and the review period referred to in subsection (b) (with respect to such message) shall run beginning after such first day.

SEC. 4. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this Act—

(a) the term 'rescission disapproval bill' means a bill or joint resolution which only disapproves a rescission of discretionary budget authority for fiscal year 1993, in whole, rescinded in a special message transmitted by the President under this Act; and

(b) the term 'calendar days of session' shall mean only those days on which both Houses of Congress are in session.

SEC. 5. CONGRESSIONAL CONSIDERATION OF LEGISLATIVE LINE ITEM VETO RESCISSIONS.

(a) PRESIDENTIAL SPECIAL MESSAGE.—Whenever the President rescinds any budget authority as provided in this Act, the President shall transmit to both Houses of Congress a special message specifying—

(1) the amount of budget authority rescinded;

(2) any account, department, or establishment of the Government to which such budget authority is available for obligation, and the specific project or governmental functions involved;

(3) the reasons and justifications for the determination to rescind budget authority pursuant to this Act;

(4) to the maximum extent practicable, the estimated fiscal, economic, and budgetary effect of the rescission; and

(5) all factions, circumstances, and considerations relating to or bearing upon the rescission and the decision to effect the rescission, and to the maximum extent practicable, the estimated effect of the rescission upon the objects, purposes, and programs for which the budget authority is provided.

(b) TRANSMISSION OF MESSAGES TO HOUSE AND SENATE.—

(1) Each special message transmitted under this Act shall be transmitted to the House of Representatives and the Senate on the same day, and shall be delivered to the Clerk of the House of Representatives if the House is not in session, and to the Secretary of the Senate if the Senate if not in session. Each special message so transmitted shall be referred to the appropriate committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate. Each such message shall be printed as a document of each House.

(2) Any special message transmitted under this Act shall be printed in the first issue of the Federal Register published after such transmittal.

(c) REFERRAL OF RESCISSION DISAPPROVAL BILLS.—Any rescission disapproval bill introduced with respect to a special message shall be referred to the appropriate committees of the House of Representatives or the Senate, as the case may be.

(d) CONSIDERATION IN THE SENATE.—

(1) Any rescission disapproval bill received in the Senate from the House shall be considered in the Senate pursuant to the provisions of this Act.

(2) Debate in the Senate on any rescission disapproval bill and debatable motions and appeals in connection therewith, shall be limited to not more than 10 hours. The time shall be equally divided between, and controlled by, the majority leader and the minority leader or their designees.

(3) Debate in the Senate on any debatable motions or appeal in connection with such bill shall be limited to 1 hour, to be equally divided between, and controlled by the mover and the manager of the bill, except that in the event the manager of the bill is in favor of any such motion or appeal, the time in opposition thereto shall be controlled by the minority leader or his designee. Such leaders, or either of them, may, from the time under their control on the passage of the bill, allot additional time to any Senator during the consideration of any debatable motion or appeal.

(4) A motion to further limit debate is not debatable. A motion to recommit (except a motion to recommit with instructions to report back within a specified number of days not to exceed 1, not counting any day in which the Senate is not in session) is not in order.

(e) POINTS OF ORDER.—

(1) It shall not be in order in the Senate or the House of Representatives to consider any rescission disapproval bill that relates to any matter other than the rescission budget authority transmitted by the President under this Act.

(2) It shall not be in order in the Senate or the House of Representatives to consider any amendment to a rescission disapproval bill.

(3) Paragraphs (1) and (2) may be waived or suspended in the Senate only by a vote of three-fifths of the members duly chosen and sworn.

SOLOMON SAYS CLINTON SHOULDN'T BE "SNOOKERED" BY DEMOCRATIC LEADERSHIP ON LINE-ITEM VETO COMPROMISE

Congressman Gerald B. Solomon (R–NY), the Ranking Republican member of the House Rules Committee, today released the following statement regarding Speaker Foley's offer of a line-item veto compromise to President-elect Clinton:

President-elect Clinton should not be snookered into believing that the line-item veto compromise offered by Speaker Foley is anything close to being a true line-item veto.

In the first place, the proposal the Speaker has been touting to Clinton is not even an "enhanced rescission" approach as he has characterized it, but rather an "expedited consideration of rescission proposals." It simply compresses the current timetable for considering presidential rescissions from 45-days to 20-days and mandates a veto on approving the rescissions.

Secondly, the Speaker has represented the approach as allowing the Congress to reinstate the vetoed spending items by majority vote. If that were the case, the proposal would be unconstitutional. What it actually does is to permit a majority of either House to block a rescission by rejecting a rescission approval bill.

So, it is not correct for President-elect Clinton to interpret the proposal as being the same as the Arkansas line-item veto in which a majority of both Houses can override a line-item veto. It would only take 51 Members of the U.S. Senate to block the President's rescission.

I hope the President-elect will not be taken-in by the Democratic Leadership on this so-called compromise and will stick by his campaign promise to ask for a real line-item veto that will stick.

We in the Republican Conference will give Members a chance to vote on reporting a true, legislative line-item veto, "enhanced rescission" approach on the opening day of Congress, January 5th, as part of our House Rules substitute. This approach would ultimately require a two-thirds vote of both Houses to override a presidential veto of a rescission disapproval bill.

Moreover, we will work to attach such a provision to the debt limit bill in February or March, and will also file a discharge petition on a line-item veto constitutional amendment.

We Republicans want to give the President what he has asked for to eliminate wasteful, pork-barrel spending from appropriations bills, and we fully expect a majority of Democrats to back-up their own President in that regard as well.

For the Democratic leaders to try to pull the pork over the President-elect's eyes at this early stage by misrepresenting the compromise they are offering, is a cynical power play that will only make the President look foolish when the truth comes out as to what the proposal really entails. The honeymoon will be over before the marriage ceremony even begins.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, November 16, 1992.

Hon. BILL CLINTON
President-Elect of the United States, Transition Headquarters, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT-ELECT: First of all, congratulations on your election. I look forward to working with you and your Administration on many areas of common interest and concern in the new Congress. I welcome your call for a bipartisan approach to problems and I know our Republican Leader feels the same.

Second, I want to strongly urge you to stick to your campaign pledge of wanting a true line-item veto and to reject any watered-down variations. Specifically, I would urge you to take a hard and close look at the proposal Speaker Foley has urged you to accept.

Contrary to the way he has represented it, it is not "enhanced rescission" approach and it would not require a majority of both Houses to override your rescissions (that would be unconstitutional under the Chadha doctrine). The compromise to which the Speaker refers is H.R. 2164 (102d Congress) as introduced by Representative Carper of Delaware, the "Expedited Considerations of Proposed Rescissions Act of 1991," which was passed by the House on October 2, 1992.

It would compress the current rescission approval period for Congress from 45-days to 20-days, permit the President to submit a rescission package with respect to each of 13 regular appropriations bills, prohibit the President from rescinding more than 25% of a newly authorized program or more than the difference between current-year and previous-year budget authority for a previously authorized program or item, while allowing up to a 100% rescission for any unauthorized item of budget authority. It also differs from existing Budget Act rescission procedures in that it mandates the introduction of and a vote on each rescission message submitted by the President and prohibits any amendments to the rescission package.

But like the current rescission procedures, for the rescission to take effect, a rescission approval bill must be passed by majority vote of both Houses and signed into law by the President. Put another way, instead of requiring a majority of both Houses to block a rescission, a majority of just one House could do so by rejecting the rescission approval bill.

What I attempted to offer in the House this year on several occasions was a truer legislative, line-item veto, enhanced rescission bill (H.R. 5915). It too would permit the President to submit a rescission package with respect to each appropriations bill and give Congress 20-days in which to act on it. But, unlike the Carper bill, it would permit the rescission to take effect unless both Houses of Congress pass a rescission disapproval bill, and it becomes law. Put another way, while a majority of both Houses is needed to pass a disapproval bill, if it is vetoed by the President, as expected, it would then take two-thirds of both Houses to override the veto and force the money to be spent.

I intend to reintroduce this bill on the first day of the new Congress on January 5th, and will press for early action on it, probably as an amendment to the bill raising the public debt limit in February or March. While my bill will propose a two-year trial run of this enhanced rescission approach, I will also reintroduce a line-item veto constitutional amendment that would be permanent, and again intend to support a discharge petition if it appears it will not be reported from the House Judiciary Committee.

In conclusion, I hope you will not now back off your campaign pledge simply because the leadership of Congress does not like the line-item veto. I think you will find that a true line item veto has widespread support from the general membership of both parties in both Houses.

With all best wishes for your presidency, I am

Sincerely yours,
GERALD B. SOLOMON,
Member of Congress.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM ACCOUNTABILITY ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Federal Reserve System Accountability Act of 1993 which will serve to make the Federal Reserve a stronger and more efficient central bank. I urge my colleagues, the Federal Reserve, the incoming administration, and the American public to keep an open mind about the changes I am proposing, changes which are long overdue and in the public interest.

Also, I am introducing a bill to provide economic stimulus for the Nations sagging economy.

The changes I am proposing are quite modest. There is nothing to fear in this bill. The legislation does not seek to politicize the Federal Reserve or take away its independence. The legislation does not call for the Federal Reserve to do anything that would cause inflation to soar or prices to destabilize. The legislation does not require the Federal Reserve to set any particular monetary targets. And, the legislation does not ask that the Congress micromanage the Federal Reserve.

Rather, the Federal Reserve System Accountability Act requires that the Federal Reserve, the central bank of the United States, be accountable for its monetary decisions, decisions that can have a tremendous impact on the economy. The legislation also makes changes in the selection process of the Federal Reserve bank presidents to assure that these key decisionmakers reflect the diversity of our population.

The Federal Reserve exerts immense influence over the American economy because of its ability to influence employment, interest rates, inflation, and the international value of our currency. The Federal Reserve controls powerful monetary policy instruments that it can use to initiate a depression, or to cause a rapid inflation which would tax away the savings of the middle class and erode the income of the poor. These monetary policy instruments can also be used to contribute to a healthy economy.

The decisionmaking committee with the greatest and most important economic policy authority in the Federal Reserve and, many would say, within the entire Federal Government is the Federal Open Market Committee, or FOMC. There is no question that the FOMC runs our Nation's monetary policy because it has complete and final governmental authority to manage the U.S. money supply. That power was given to the Federal Reserve by Congress and by a 1951 agreement between the Treasury and the Federal Reserve.

New dollar bills printed at the U.S. Bureau of Engraving are delivered to the 12 regional Federal Reserve banks by the U.S. Treasury. The FOMC through what is called open market operations can, in effect, order these dollar bills to be circulated in any amounts it chooses. Too little money can strangle the economy. Too much money can cause inflation. The proper growth of the money supply is important to maintaining healthy economic growth and prosperity.

The Federal Reserve System Accountability Act will not remove the FOMC's enormous authority to change the money supply. Rather, this legislation would require the President of the United States to nominate those who would serve on the powerful FOMC. These nominees must include representatives of agriculture, small business, labor, consumer and community groups, women and minorities. Once nominated, the candidates would have their credentials and their intentions fully and publicly scrutinized by the Senate during confirmation hearings. This is no different than the process currently used to select the Governors of the Federal Reserve.

Full accountability in a democracy is essential and, I think, consistent with the intentions of the Framers of our Constitution. The appointment clause of the Constitution, article II section II, clause 2 specifies:

> He [the President] * * * shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate * * * all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for * * *.

Clearly, those who have final authority for managing our Nation's money supply should be superior or senatorial officers subject to appointment clause.

Currently, the 12 member FOMC is composed of the seven members of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve and 5 of the 12 presidents of the regional Federal Reserve banks. The president of the New York Federal Reserve Bank is always on the FOMC while the other four seats on the FOMC are given on a rotating basis to the other 11 regional Federal Reserve bank presidents. As I mentioned before, the seven members of the Board of Governors are appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate, but not the regional bank presidents.

Some argue that confirmation of those voting on our Nation's money supply would "politicize the Federal Reserve". This charge is false. In reality, these changes would make the presidents more independent from short-run political winds. Let me tell you why.

First, it should be emphasized that at present the presidents of the Federal Reserve banks are dependent on the seven members of the Board of Governors who also serve on the FOMC. The bank presidents must receive the approval of the Board of Governors for their initial appointment and for subsequent appointments every 5 years. The presidents are certainly not now coequal members of the FOMC with the seven members of the Board of Governors. The political pressures that result from the dependence of presidents on the Board of Governors members for their jobs and salaries is removed by the Federal Reserve System Accountability Act.

Second, consider the method of selection at the German central bank, the Deutsche Bundesbank, which has been classified as both the most independent central bank and the bank most determined to avoid policies causing inflation. Although it might surprise some, the truth is that the German central bank requires Federal Government action for the appointment of its monetary policy decisionmakers.

The process goes like this. The nine presidents of the land central banks of each German state, which are part of the Bundesbank, are nominated by the Bundesrat, which is one of the two chambers of the German Parliament. After consultation with the Central Bank Council, which is similar to the FOMC in our Federal Reserve, the nominees are appointed by the President of the Federal Republic of Germany. These nine state bank presidents form part of the Central Bank Council of the Bundesbank which also includes the eight directors of the Bundesbank. This Central Bank Council votes on monetary and policy operations.

This is where the similarity ends. The Federal Reserve does not require the same Federal review of all its monetary policy decisionmakers as does the German central bank. At present the selection of the presidents of the regional Federal Reserve banks is an in-bred process with no public accountability. The Federal Reserve bank presidents are elected by the nine-member board of directors at each bank, subject to the approval of the Board of Governors. The nine-member boards of directors of each bank is composed of three members appointed by the Board of Governors and six elected by the member banks in each district.

Who have the bankers elected to these boards that, in turn, elect the people who vote on our money supply? The House Banking Committee issued a report addressing that question in 1977. The answer is: "The virtual exclusion of women, blacks, and representatives of labor unions, consumer interest organizations, nonmanagerial and nonproducer interest groups." In response, the Congress passed the Federal Reserve Reform Act of 1977. The act requires that all Federal Reserve bank directors be chosen "without discrimination on the basis of race, creed, color, sex, or national origin."

I had my staff conduct an intensive study in 1990 to see if diversity had occurred as specified in the law. The report, "A Racial, Gender, and Background Profile of the Directors of the Federal Reserve Banks and Branches" provided the answer. The Federal Reserve has simply said "no" to diversity. For example, according to the staff report, among the 72 class A and B directors who are chosen by private member banks in the 12 Federal Reserve districts there was one African American, no Hispanic Americans, and only three women. Of the 36 class C directors chosen by the members of the Board of Governors—who are supposed to represent the public—50 percent were former bank directors and none worked for consumer or labor organizations.

The Federal Reserve selects directors from a small pool of bankers, retired bankers, and their friends in industry. Not only is this in violation of the 1977 act, it ignores the demographics of the public as a whole and the markets the banks serve throughout our country. The upper echelons of the Federal Reserve's management—the top staff at the Board of Governors, the 12 presidents of the Reserve banks and the 7 members of the Board of Governors—have been and continue to be practically devoid of women and minorities. In other words, women and minorities have little or no say in the conduct of our Nation's monetary policy and in bank regulation. The lack of female and minority representation alienates tens of millions of Americans from representation and influence.

It comes as no surprise that the Federal Reserve recently reported extensive bias against minorities in bank lending. These minorities are just as underrepresented on the boards of the 4,623 State and nationally chartered banks that are currently members of the Federal Reserve System, as they are on the boards of the Federal Reserve banks.

I believe we should start to remedy this problem by making the Federal Reserve banks a role model for the entire banking industry. We simply must change the method of selecting Federal Reserve bank presidents so that the old boy network gives way to a more diverse representation. This will give banks the incentive to follow the leader. Increasing the number of women and minorities in decisionmaking positions at our Nation's banks will have the positive effect of creating a lending atmosphere cognizant of the needs of creditworthy borrowers, regardless of their race or sex or place of residence.

The Federal Reserve System Accountability Act contains language which will help end the Federal Reserve's discrimination against women and minorities. The legislation requires that the Federal Reserve abide by the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which guarantees employees' basic civil rights, including the ability to pursue the Federal Reserve for discrimination. It is time the Federal Reserve entered the 20th century and adopted and embraced these civil rights principles.

Some have suggested that requiring the Federal Reserve Bank presidents to go through Senate confirmation will deter qualified candidates from seeking the position. Public examination of important Government decisionmakers' credentials and objectives is a price that applicants must pay in a democracy because the public is the employer for whom these people will serve. Private examination of the bank presidents' credentials and objectives, as is currently done by the Board of Governors, bypasses public accountability and weakens the trust the public has in the Federal Reserve. A bank president whose interests are the same as the public should have nothing to fear from the confirmation process.

The Federal Reserve System Accountability Act would increase the number of members of each Federal Reserve bank's board of directors appointed by the Board of Governors to six. Currently, the Federal Reserve Governors only appoint three directors of each Federal Reserve bank. In addition, the legislation requires the Federal Reserve Governors to bypass bankers in favor of those representing the public when they appoint these directors. The Federal Reserve member banks would be allowed to elect three members of the Reserve Bank Board of Directors drawn from the banking industry. The changes proposed by the legislation will help to insure that the boards of directors reflect the diversity of populations in each of the 12 Federal Reserve districts. Currently it is difficult to enforce diversity when the constituency is limited to the banking industry which has been found to be practicing bias, whether intentional or otherwise, in making loans.

In addition, the American public should know that of the Federal Reserve System member banks that vote for these Reserve bank directors, approximately 60 banks, with $130 billion in assets, are foreign owned. In the New York Federal Reserve District 33 percent of the medium-sized member banks and 25 percent of the large member banks voting for the directors of the New York Federal Reserve Bank are foreign owned. This must be considered in light of the fact that the president of the New York Federal Reserve Bank always sits on the FOMC.

Foreign-owned banks can have close connections with foreign governments or foreign causes that are not in our national interest. Officials of foreign-owned banks should not be voting for directors of the Federal Reserve banks. This is the wrong constituency for Federal Reserve bank presidents who serve on the FOMC. Our top economic decisionmakers should not even have the appearance of a conflict of interest with regard to the objectives of U.S. Government policies. The Federal Reserve System Accountability Act would end the present method of selecting presidents of the Federal Reserve banks.

I now turn to the issue of making the FOMC accountable for its actions. For many years, beginning in 1936, the FOMC prepared paraphrased minutes of its meetings. These minutes included detailed documentation of discussions and identified the specific views advanced by FOMC members. On May 5, 1964 the FOMC unanimously adopted procedures for releasing the minutes to the public 5 years after the meeting took place. With the passage of the Government in the Sunshine Act of 1976 which required that minutes of meetings of public agencies be made public, and following some litigation, the Federal Reserve decided on an outrageous way to evade the law. The FOMC just stopped taking minutes.

The Federal Reserve System Accountability Act remedies this failure to take minutes by requiring that the FOMC provide a complete record of its meetings to the public.

J.L. Robertson, a former vice chairman of the FOMC, wrote the following to the House Banking Committee in 1976:

> If minutes of the (FOMC) meetings are not kept and eventually made available, there would be no possible way for the Congress or members of the public to appraise the contribution of any member of the Committee to the formulation of policy.

Anna Schwartz, the distinguished money and banking scholar who with economist Milton Friedman wrote a detailed history of money and banking in the United States, is especially qualified to comment on what kind of a record establishes accountability at the Federal Reserve. She wrote to the committee in 1976:

> I now favor mechanically reported verbatim records of all meetings * * *.

To assure that the public receives an accurate depiction, the act requires that the FOMC videotape its meetings and release the footage 60 days after the meeting occurred. A written transcript of the meetings would also be required to be released. The FOMC normally meets eight times a year.

The FOMC must end its secret deliberations which affect the economic well being of every person in this Nation. It must let the sunshine in when it comes to accountability to the public it serves. The Federal Reserve System Accountability Act will restore accountability at FOMC meetings.

To assure greater accountability at the Federal Reserve itself, the legislation requires that the Federal Reserve be subject to the Freedom of Information Act, which allows the public to gain access to Federal Reserve documents. This provision will help to ensure that the Federal Reserve is accountable to the public for its policies. The Federal Reserve is opposed to this provision, but I firmly believe that the public has the right to know.

I also believe the General Accounting Office [GAO] should have audit authority for all Federal Reserve operations. In 1978 Congress gave the GAO the right to audit the Federal Reserve. However, in large part because of another lobbying campaign conducted by the Federal Reserve through the boards of directors of its Federal Reserve banks, the GAO audit was severely limited. The limitations include prohibiting the GAO from auditing any Federal Reserve operations connected with monetary policy or international operations.

I believe the GAO should audit the Federal Reserve's open market operations. Last year the Federal Reserve open market operations amounted to more than $3.7 trillion while the net change in securities for the year was $29 billion. Are we to believe some scholars who say this is extreme churning—unnecessary buying and selling—that, as a byproduct, enriches Government money market dealers? I want to be able to ask the GAO to look into this practice.

The proposed legislation also requires the Federal Reserve Board and each Reserve bank to be audited annually by an independent public accountant.

The Federal Reserve System Accountability Act also establishes a Federal Reserve Reform Commission to study a number of important issues. These issues are:

First, the appropriateness of existing Federal Reserve Districts: Should we continue to base the districts on U.S. population and aggregate incomes of over 70 years ago? Should we have only one Federal Reserve bank west of Kansas City where approximately half the population currently lives? Steelville, MO was found to be the center of population in the 1990 census.

Second, the feasibility of further privatizing the check clearing system rather than having the Federal Reserve dominate the check clearing system: Can privately owned check clearing systems provide our citizens with less expensive and more rapid check clearing services? Can privately owned check clearing services provide more rapid record retrieval so that lost checks can be quickly traced?

Third, the rationale for the $30.1 billion SWAP fund internally authorized by the FOMC to intervene in international currency markets: Sometimes the FOMC uses the SWAP fund to make longer term arrangements that are essentially loans to foreign countries without any congressional budgetary authorization? The Treasury has an exchange stabilization fund which has the same function as the Federal Reserve SWAP fund. Yet the Treasury fund currently receives congressional budgetary authority. Why should the Federal Reserve be treated differently?

The 1962 minutes of the FOMC show that Vice Chairman J.L. Robertson told the FOMC that he questioned the legality of the fund which he thought was being started to give the FOMC an unlimited pocketbook and a way to bypass congressional budgetary approval.

Also, I have introduced a third bill to correct a gross injustice imposed on home owner through the corrupted escrow account system.

In conclusion, I believe the public has the right to ask its central bank decisionmakers to be accountable for the monetary policy it designs for them. The public has the right to require audits of Federal Reserve operations so as not to be kept in the dark. The public has the right to require that the decisionmaking jobs at the Federal Reserve structure should be modernized so that it can efficiently service all regions of the country on the basis of the location of our citizens and our businesses in the 1990's and the 21st century. The Federal Reserve System Accountability Act is essential to meeting these needs.

H.R.— FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM ACCOUNTABILITY ACT OF 1993

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1. Short title: "Federal Reserve System Accountability Act of 1993."

Section 2. Public Accountability of Boards of Directors of Federal Reserve Banks:

Section 2 of the Federal Reserve System Accountability Act of 1993 restates and reorganizes paragraphs 4 through 24 of section 4 of the Federal Reserve Act. Paragraphs 1 through 3 are omitted from section 4 of the Federal Reserve Act as rewritten since they relate to the initial organization of the Federal reserve banks and have not been codified. Section 2(a) retains much of current law; the law is rewritten and organized into subsections and paragraphs for easier reading. Substantive changes to section 4 of the Federal Reserve Act are noted below.

Section 4(a) of the Federal Reserve Act sets forth the general corporate powers of a Federal reserve bank. The powers set forth in paragraphs (1) through (4) and (6) through (8) are the same as those under current law. Section 4(a)(5) permits the board of directors to appoint officers other than the president. Under current law, the board of directors also may appoint the president of the bank.

New section 4(b)(1) of the Federal Reserve Act provides that the president of each Federal reserve bank shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the consent of the Senate. Currently, the president is elected by the board of directors of the bank. The President must include representatives of agriculture, small business, labor, consumer and community organizations, women, and minorities when appointing presidents of the Federal reserve banks. Note that "consumer and community organization" is defined in section 4(k) of the Federal Reserve System Accountability Act.

New section 4(b)(2) of the Federal Reserve Act provides for a first vice president who shall serve as chief executive officer of each Federal reserve bank in the event of the president's absence or disability or a vacancy in the office of president. (Same as current law). However, service as acting chief executive officer has a time limit of not more than 120 days.

The president and first vice president shall have a term of five (5) years, as is the case under current law.

Section 4(b)(4) provides that a vacancy in the office of the president or first vice president shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made and the person so appointed shall hold office for the remainder of the term of such person's predecessor. Thus, section 4(b)(4) retains current law.

Section 4(c) of the Federal Reserve Act sets forth the duties of the board of directors of each Federal reserve bank. The duties are the same as those set forth under current law. The general conditions under which credit may be extended by the Federal reserve banks and the power of the Board of Governors to prescribe regulations further defining those conditions are enumerated in section 4(c). The conditions and powers are the same as those currently set forth in paragraph 8 of section 4 of the Federal Reserve Act.

The Federal Reserve System Accountability Act substantially amends the composition and method of selecting members of the board of directors of each Federal reserve bank.

New section 4(d) of the Federal Reserve Act states that each board shall consist of 9 members; 3 shall be Class A members and 6 shall be Class B members.

The Class A members are elected by the member banks of the Federal reserve district, as described below in section 4(e), and are representative of those banks. The Class B members are appointed by the Board of Governors, as described below in section 4(f). The Class B members represent the public and are representative of the public. One Class B member shall be designated by the Board of Governors to serve as the chairperson of the board of directors of the Federal reserve bank.

As is the case under current law, section 4(d)(5) of the Federal Reserve Act provides that no member of Congress can serve as a member of the Board of Governors or as an officer or director of a Federal reserve bank.

Section 4(d)(6) retains a 3 year term limit for members of the boards of directors and provides for interim appointments.

Section 4(d)(7) retains current law by providing that director vacancies are to be filled in the manner in which the original selection was made.

New section 4(e) of the Federal Reserve Act provides for the nomination and election of Class A directors. The Board of Governors is instructed to classify the member banks of each Federal reserve district into 3 general groups of banks of similar capitalization, as is currently done under paragraph 16 of section 4 of the Federal Reserve Act. Each member bank can nominate one candidate for director of Class A. The nominees are then listed by groups and preferential ballots cast by each member bank for the nominees of the group to which the bank belongs. This is the same process for the election of Class A directors found in paragraphs 16 and 17 of section 4 of the Federal Reserve Act.

Sections 4(e)(4) (A) through (C) retain current law regarding the eligibility of directors on the basis of group, the special rule that applies in the case of a candidate that serves as director or officer of more than 1 member bank, and the determination of electors for member banks that are affiliates of the same holding company.

Section 4(e)(4)(D) states that an officer, director, employee, or controlling shareholder of a foreign bank which is controlled by a foreign government, or of any branch, agency, or company controlled by any such foreign bank, is ineligible to serve as a director of any Federal reserve bank. A foreign bank which is controlled by a foreign government cannot participate in the election or nomination of class A directors. Control is determined in accordance with section 2 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956.

New section 4(f) governs describes the eligibility requirements of Class B directors. The Board is instructed to include representatives of agriculture, small business, labor, consumer and community organizations, women, and minorities when appointing Class B board members. No Class B director may be a director, officer, employee, or shareholder of any depository institution or depository institution holding company. Any person who has resided in the bank's district for less than 2 years or who has been a director, officer, employee, or controlling shareholder of any depository institution or any affiliate of a depository institution during the preceding 2 year period is not eligible to serve as a Class B director.

The Board of Governors is instructed to designate one Class B director of each Federal reserve bank as chairperson and Federal reserve agent and one Class B director as deputy chairperson for the district of the bank, pursuant to section 4(g) of the Federal Reserve Act. The duties and compensation of the chairperson are set forth in section 4(g)(2) and are the same as current law.

Section 4(h) provides that the Federal reserve agent can appoint one or more assistant Federal reserve agents from among individuals with tested banking experience. The duties and compensation of the assistant Federal reserve agents are set forth in section 4(h) (2), (3), and (4) and are the same as current law.

Section 4(i) of the Federal Reserve Act retains current law regarding the compensation and expenses of directors, officers, and employees of the Federal reserve banks.

Under section 4(j) of the Federal Reserve Act, the Board or the bank must publish in a newspaper of general circulation in the Federal reserve district a notice of the appointment or election of any member of the board of directors of any Federal Reserve bank.

"Consumer and community organization" is defined in section 4(k) of the Federal Reserve Act to mean any organization which has more than a 2-year history of representing consumer or community interests in the provision of banking services, services in connection with meeting credit needs, or housing and financial consumer protections.

"Minority" is defined in section 1204(c)(3) of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 as, "any Black American, Native American, Hispanic American, or Asian American."

Section 2(b) of the Federal Reserve System Accountability Act states that the amendments made by section 2(a) are effective one year after the date of enactment of the Act. The Board of Governors may prescribe regulations prior to the effective date.

Section 2(c) of the Federal Reserve System Accountability Act establishes the transition to the system for the election of directors and appointment of presidents established in section 2(a). Under section 2(c), the term of office for each director and president of a Federal Reserve bank shall end on the effective date of the Federal Reserve System Accountability Act. Thereafter, the presidents shall be appointed for staggered terms, i.e. 3 shall be appointed for a term of 5 years, 3 for a term of 4 years, 2 for a term of 3 years, 2 for a term of 2 years, and 2 for a term of 1 year as designated by the President of the United States at the time of appointment.

Of the Class A directors first elected after the effective date of the Federal Reserve System Accountability Act, 1 shall be elected for a term of 3 years, 1 for a term of 2 years, and 1 for a term of 1 year, as designated by the Board of Governors.

Similarly, of the Class B directors first appointed after the effective date of the Federal Reserve System Accountability Act, 2 shall be appointed for a term of 3 years, 2 for a term of 2 years, and 2 for a term of 1 year, as designated by the Board of Governors.

Section 3. Independent audits of Federal Reserve Board and Federal Reserve banks required:

Section 3(a) amends section 11A of the Federal Reserve Act by adding a new section 11B, Independent Audits. Section 11B(a) requires the financial statement of the Board and of each Federal reserve bank to be audited annually by an independent certified public accountant.

Section 3(b) amends 31 U.S.C. section 714(b) by striking the list of exceptions to the authority of the Comptroller General to audit the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System and the Federal reserve banks.

Section 4. Prompt public disclosure of open market committee meetings:

Section 4 adds a new subsection (d) to section 12A of the Federal Reserve Act. The section requires a written copy of the minutes of each meeting of the Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) and a transcription and a videotape of the meeting to be made publicly available within 60 days of the meeting. A description of any determination or directive made by the FOMC at any meeting must be made publicly available within 1 week of the meeting.

Section 5. Eligibility requirements for board of directors of branches of Federal Reserve banks:

Section 5 amends section 3 of the Federal Reserve Act by organizing it into subsections and paragraphs. In addition, section 5 provides that when appointing members of the board of directors of any branch of a Federal reserve bank, each Federal Reserve bank and the Board shall include representatives of agriculture, small business, labor, consumer and community organizations, women and minorities. Members of the board of directors appointed by the Board of Governors must meet the same eligibility requirements as those imposed on the Class B directors of the Federal reserve banks.

Section 6. Federal Reserve district advisory councils:

New section 4(l) of the Federal Reserve Act requires each Federal reserve bank to establish at least one advisory council consisting of representatives of agriculture, small business, labor, consumer and community organizations, women, and minorities to advise the bank. The councils are required to meet at least semi-annually and at least 1 member of the board of directors of the Federal reserve bank must attend each meeting. Each advisory council must submit to the bank any recommendations it makes.

Section 7. Repeal of exemption of Federal Reserve Board and Federal Reserve banks from title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964:

Section 7 amends section 701(b) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 by including the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System and each Federal reserve bank in the definition of "employer."

Section 8. Federal Reserve Accountability Commission:

Section 8 of the Federal Reserve System Accountability Act establishes a Federal Reserve Accountability Commission (the "Commission"). The Commission is instructed to study the following:

(1) the appropriateness of the designation of existing Federal reserve cities and the boundaries of the existing Federal reserve districts;

(2) the appropriateness of the stock purchase requirement and the rate of dividends paid by Federal reserve banks to their shareholders;

(3) the fair market value of the check clearing operation of the Federal Reserve System and the feasibility of privatizing all or some of the check clearing functions;

(4) the effect of the regulations of the Board and the operations of the Board and the Federal reserve banks on low- and moderate-income families, including the effects on availability and cost of financial services and credit;

(5) the appropriateness of prohibiting the Board of Governors from engaging in swap operations or maintaining any swap fund other than by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

(6) the appropriateness of salary and classification system of the Board of Governors and the Federal reserve banks.

The Commission will consist of 9 members appointed as follows: 3 by the President (not more than 2 can belong to the same political party); 3 by the Speaker of the House (2 by the majority, 1 by the minority); 3 by the President pro tempore of the Senate (2 by the majority, 1 by the minority).

The term of each member shall be the life of the Commission. Members shall serve without pay but may receive travel expenses. Five members shall constitute a quorum. The Chairperson and Vice Chairperson of the Commission shall be designated by the President from among the members appointed by the President. The Commission shall meet at the call of the Chairperson or a majority of the members.

The Commission shall have a director who shall be appointed by the Chairperson with the approval of the Commission. The Director may appoint and fix the pay of personnel, with the approval of the Commission; however, the rate of pay may not exceed the level payable for level V of the Executive Schedule. Certain civil service laws do not apply to the appointment of the Director and staff of the Commission. The Director may procure the services of experts and consultants with the approval of the Commission. Staff of Federal agencies may be detailed to the Commission upon the request of the Chairperson.

The powers of the Commission are set forth in section 7(e). The Commission may hold hearings, meet, take testimony, and receive evidence. The Commission may obtain official data pursuant to the request of the Chairperson, use the United States mails, and receive, on a reimbursable basis, administrative support services.

The Commission must submit a final report to the President, the Board of Governors, and the Congress within 18 months of the enactment of the Federal Reserve System Accountability Act. The final report must including findings, conclusions, and any recommendations for legislative and administrative actions. The Commission will terminate not later than 30 days after submitting the final report.

One million dollars is authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 1994 and 1995 for the Commission.

Section 9. Recess appointees and acting presidents of Federal Reserve banks prohibited from participating in decisions of the Federal open market committee.

New section 12A(e) of the Federal Reserve Act states that only individuals who have been appointed by the President, by and with the advise and consent of the Senate, can vote or approve any determination or directive made by the Federal Open Market Committee.

A technical and conforming amendment is made to section 12A(a) of the Federal Reserve Act to ensure that only Federal reserve bank presidents that have been appointed by the President can serve on the Federal Open Market Committee.

Section 10. Federal Reserve banks treated as agencies for purposes of Freedom of Information Act.

Section 10 amends 5 U.S.C. 552(f) by including Federal reserve banks within the list of entities treated as agencies for purposes of the Freedom of Information Act:

EMERGENCY COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1992

Mr. Speaker, today I am also introducing a bill to provide an economic stimulus for the Nation's sagging economy and collapsed public confidence level, which despite some recent indications of improvement, need to be addressed. This bill will create jobs mainly by spurring construction of public infrastructure activities and housing. This bill would authorize approximately $30.4 billion in budget and loan authority to be appropriated in this fiscal year 1993 for certain housing and community development programs that will generate an estimated 668,800 jobs.

This legislation is based upon testimony from economists, mayors, local, and State officials, and residents in hearings held in numerous cities throughout the United States and in Washington, DC, and reflects the unmet demand for funding for projects already planned and approvable applications already filed.

Mr. Speaker, the preponderance of evidence heard last year by the Banking Committee and several other committees established that infrastructure investment and investment in low-income housing are of sufficient long-term nature as to satisfy the concern that any increases in public spending might crowd out private sector borrowing and be detrimental to the long-term economic health of the Nation. The fact is that while providing an immediate economic stimulus, the provisions in this bill fall into the category of sound long-term investments that will yield long-term benefits and improve our Nation's economy.

This bill is a revised version of H.R. 4073 which I introduced last January 3, 1992, and that was reported by the Banking Committee on May 14, 1992. This bill has been revised by increasing the funding level from $10 billion to $25 billion for infrastructure investment, distributed through the community development block grant [CDBG] formula and by deleting those provisions previously in the bill that were already adopted in the Housing Act of 1992.

This bill would provide this country with an opportunity to create jobs through providing funding for streets, sewers, water systems, and other capital improvement programs that rural and urban communities already have planned, but lack necessary Federal funding and for additional housing assistance to expand the stock of affordable housing.

Cities and States have suffered from devastating neglect during the decade of the eighties as costs and demand for services and improvements have escalated. This bill represents an opportunity to invest in existing programs that have a proven track record and, in so doing, jump start the economy while providing for long-term growth.

This bill is carefully crafted to satisfy several principles as follows: first, each activity provided for in this bill will spend out quickly; second, the bill utilizes existing programs so that no new and extensive regulations would be required; third, the bill includes only those activities that would clearly lend themselves to long-term growth, as well as serving as a short-term stimulus; and fourth, the bill maximizes job creation in each of the activities undertaken.

The bill meets each of the principles cited above and has been supported in the past by the broadest possible array of public interest and industry organizations for this type of legislation: the homebuilders, realtors, mortgage bankers, both the rural and urban low-income advocacy groups, labor, the cities, counties, and State governments, as well as many academicians. It is my hope that the bill again will enjoy such strong support.

This bill would authorize: $25 billion for temporary assistance for certain community development activities; $500 million for first-time home buyers assistance through the national homeownership trust; and $4.9 billion for rural low-income housing programs—credit budget costs and rural grants are actually $1.9 billion.

I ask that Members join in the cosponsorship of this important legislation.

ESCROW ACCOUNT REFORM ACT OF 1993

Mr. Speaker, today I am also introducing a bill that will address some of the problems and frustrations that homeowners have with the manner in which their escrow accounts are calculated and maintained.

The law governing the establishment and maintenance of escrow accounts is part of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act of 1974 [RESPA]. This law was designed to permit the establishment of escrow accounts in reasonable amounts sufficient to ensure the payment of property taxes, insurance and other like charges when they come due. However, due to ambiguities in the law and the lack of an adequate enforcement mechanism, many homeowners have been required to pay much more than what was reasonable. A study by seven State attorneys general found that two-thirds of all homeowners are required to pay more into their escrow accounts than the law permits. The average excess amount is about $170 per borrower. A copy of this report entitled, "Overcharging on Mortgages: Violations of Escrow Account Limits by the Mortgage Lending Industry," is published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for October 10, 1991.

Further, due to the differing interpretations of RESPA, servicers have great latitude in applying RESPA to particular accounts. As a result, when loan servicing is transferred between servicers, borrowers can be required to pay additional and sometimes large sums to the new servicers. This bill will address some of these problems by clarifying the statutory requirements and providing for an enforcement mechanism for the escrow accounting provisions of RESPA. I will not go into detail about the legislation at this point: However, I do want to highlight some important provisions in the bill.

First, this legislation requires that the amount of money in the account must always fall at some point during the years to an amount equal to 2 months of escrow payments.

Second, the legislation requires the servicer to pay the borrower interest for the use of his or her money at a rate equal to the current passbook savings rate, as determined by HUD. However, unlike H.R. 3542, this is a prospective, not a retrospective change; it only affects mortgages which begin 1 year after the date of enactment. This requirement adopts the recommendation made at hearings before the Subcommittee on Housing and Community Development and should provide a disincentive for overcharging borrowers.

Third, the legislation enables the home borrower to pay his escrow expenses directly assuming that certain equity requirements and other financial requirements are met. The current escrow account requirements do not allow a borrower to assume responsibility for escrow expenses upon request. Under this bill, the borrower's request to pay escrow charges will require that the loan-to-value ratio is no more than 80 percent and that the borrower has agreed to make timely payments of all taxes, assessments, and premiums.

Fourth, the legislation clarifies that the borrower and HUD have the power to enforce escrow rights in court.

Finally, the bill directs HUD to study the feasibility of standardizing escrow procedures.

Once again, reform is needed to reduce the amounts home buyers are required to place in escrow accounts established to insure the payment of real estate taxes and insurance. It is intolerable that Federal law is ignored to the disadvantage of millions of American homeowners. This legislation will strengthen RESPA and provide HUD with the powers to enforce it.

CHANGES IN HOUSE RULES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, earlier today we had a rather important discussion of the House and the rules that we will operate under for the next 2 years. I realize that for most Members these are rather esoteric matters. They see the House rules as something that is internal and really not very important in terms of the legislative process. It is one of those things to get out of the way and not have to worry about in the future.

The fact is, though, that we made some fundamental decisions on the House floor today about how legislation will be structured in the future. The process is important, and the process by which we pass legislation often determines the content of that legislation.

We made some decisions today that I think will adversely affect the content of legislation and will undermine the ability of this body to do decent democratic work on legislation. I would like to discuss some of the rules that we did not discuss earlier today and try to outline what I think some of the implications are for this House in what took place here.

Some of the rules, of course, were fairly minor kinds of things that do not need much mention. For instance, changing the name of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, I don't think is going to cause very much heartburn for any Member. But some of the matters that look fairly nondescript become problematic when it becomes necessary to actually operate the House. Let me give a couple examples.

We abolished the nonrecord teller votes. The teller vote is the process by which we count the number of Members voting for a particular amendment by having tellers assigned and the Members march up the center aisle and are counted individually on a matter before the House. This is something which is not used very often. It is something which is not normally a part of the process.

However, it becomes important in a particular sense. There are many times in the House of Representatives where we get to a late-night session or where we are headed for a weekend where there is a general agreement on both sides of the aisle that we will have no more record votes, that we want to proceed ahead with the legislation but that there will be no more record votes on matters before the House.

We have been able to accommodate that on most instances because what we get is either a division vote, where Members stand and are counted by the Chair, or we could use a teller vote to take the place of a record vote, if that became necessary, remembering that teller votes follow a division vote.

Of course, the division vote is still in place for the House, but by the elimination of the teller vote it seems to me that those kinds of deals will probably be very hard to get in the future. And I say that because on the minority side we do not trust very much some of the counts that we get on division votes.

We have learned that sometimes the Chair finds all kinds of extra votes out on the House floor, when they count for a division. And we do not have very much faith that division votes are counted accurately when it comes to crucial issues. So therefore, we have needed the teller vote as a way to make certain that we got a more accurate kind of count.

Now the teller vote will not be there, and the only way that we will be able to get the accurate count that we want will be to go to a record vote, which means that making deals to further the business of the House and move the House forward without record votes probably will be impossible to do in the future.

We created the Office of General Counsel in the new rules. That was interesting because the new office is created under the direction of the Speaker.

Now, this is something that the minority had thought would be an appropriate kind of thing to get, an independent general counsel. Of course, what we suggested was that it be an independent bipartisan general counsel, that the minority have into this office so that we would be aware of the legal matters before the House.

This general counsel, of course, is not a bipartisan office. It will be a strictly partisan office operated under the Speaker. But the way in which it was done raises a very interesting question.

As I understand it, the subpoenas that now come to the House of Representatives, subpoenas from various kinds of prosecutors around Washington, come into the Clerk's office. Up until now the counsel has been a part of the Clerk's office, and so he was the recipient of these subpoenas. Now the counsel will no longer be in the Clerk's office.

The question is, who now receives the subpoenas and who now informs the minority about those subpoenas, because the counsel will no longer have access to them? He is an independent office, separate and in the Speaker's office. And so there is now the question of who will receive the subpoenas and how will the minority, who has been guaranteed in the past that we were to receive information on subpoenas based on the receipt of them by the counsel, how will we get timely notification about subpoenas regarding criminal matters that are before the House of Representatives?

We do not see that covered in the rules. We did not hear any discussion of it on the House floor today. We know no precedents on this, and it raises some serious questions about whether or not the minority is once again going to be left out of the loop when it comes to the question of criminal subpoenas before the House. Is this another trick to take away from the minority its legitimate right to know about matters where the House is being subpoenaed on matters relating to criminality?

The rules also permit the Speaker to declare recesses of his own volition. This can be very, very harmful in the legislative process.

Under this particular process, if a matter appears to be going the wrong way for the majority side, the Speaker can simply declare a recess until the recalcitrant Members can be taken into a back room and told the facts of life. This, of course, will be something that will be used consistently against the minority, if it appears as though the minority is on the roll.

What we can have is a recess to kind of get the majority's act back together. That will not serve the best interests of the American people.

The American people, of course, will be represented by folks who think they are representing their districts and what we will have is recesses declared as a way of making certain that the people's interests get lost in the necessary special interests within the Congress.

It is a very, very bad change in the House rules.

We now have a new rule on the question of privileged resolutions. Privileged resolutions are something where individual Members can bring before the House matters of importance to the House. They largely, in recent years, have been used to uncover scandals in the House. Where there has been notification or where there has been concerns raised about things going wrong in the House of Representatives, what we have done is used privileged resolutions to bring those matters to the House floor and seek remedy for what was going wrong.

Now under this particular provision we will no longer be able to do that in a timely manner. The Speaker would be given the authority to postpone for 2 days consideration of certain questions of privilege which affect the rights of the House collectively. What that means is that if a Member brings up the question of some kind of scandal that is taking place in the House, the Speaker will have a chance to delay action on that matter. And it seems to me we will have opportunities for coverup to take place before resolution of the matter ever is allowed to be discussed on the House floor.

In another matter that was done in the rules, the Speaker was given the power to take Members off of select and conference committees. This is a very, very worrisome change.

Under this provision, if you are a part of a conference committee, remembering that conference committees are those committees that meet of both House and Senate Members, deciding the final form of legislation, if you are a member of a conference committee and you happen to be doing something that the Speaker does not like or that the majority party does not like, or are perhaps actually turning the legislation some, making it at least in your view better, the Speaker can actually reach onto that conference committee and with the permission of no one, pull you off of it.

That is true of both minority and majority Members. So if I, as ranking member of the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology, have been assigned to a conference committee on matters relating to Science, Space, and Technology, and I am defending my party's position, which may be different from the majority party's position, the Speaker can in fact discipline me by removing me from the committee despite the fact that I am the leader of that committee for the Republicans in the House. I think that is terribly wrong, and it makes absolutely no sense.

In fact, what the Speaker can do under this provision is, he can actually remove all the minority Members from the conference committee. He could actually reach in and take everybody off who is a minority Member, leaving only majority Members on the committee that decides the final form of legislation, and that is not a democratic process at work, and he does not have to replace them, so that he can keep all the votes just being majority party votes. That is a terrible travesty within the process.

I must say to my friends on the majority side that they also ought to be worried about this, because the fact is if you are a recalcitrant Member on the majority side, the Speaker can also reach onto conference committees and take you off, so that you had better always toe the line, because if you are not toeing the line the fact is you can be removed from the conference committee. Once again, I see that as a power that borders on tyranny, rather than democracy.

Another provision is a provision that allows the committees of the House to meet during the House debate on amendments. Now, that often happens. There are often committee meetings taking place at the same time that the House is deliberating; the point being that up until now, for most committees, they had to get the permission of the House to do it. That is important, because what it assures is that only the most important committee meetings take place; that there is general unanimity that those committee meetings are so important that they outweigh what is going on in the House on any given day.

If committees are generally allowed to sit during the House amendment process, the deliberative function of the House will be further eroded. It is bad enough as it is. The fact is that on most debates, very few Members are on the House floor to listen to the debate anyhow, which means that Members are not present to get themselves informed on the floor amendments that they are being asked to vote on.

What we are now doing is saying, "We want even less Members on the floor," because what will be done is, they will be tied up in their committee meetings and won't be available to come to the floor.

Now, you put that together with another change that I regard as maybe being the worst, if not one of the worst, in this particular package. That is the idea of rolling committee quorums. This is a unique idea that the Democrats came up with in their rules package, which is very, very troublesome. One of the fundamental principles of parliamentary law, dating clear back to the formation of Thomas Jefferson's Manual, has been that a committee, and this is quoting from the Jefferson Manual, "can only act when together." To permit the committee to take actions without actually acting together is a very, very grave perversion of the legislative process and of the democratic process.

Under the rolling quorum concept, what can happen is that legislation can be passed not by a committee meeting in a room and deciding that it is time to pass the legislation, but by a declaration that "what we are going to do is allow the vote to remain open until sufficient members of the committee have shown up to vote on the matter," so literally the vote can take place over a matter of hours, over a matter of days, over a matter of weeks, over a matter of months.

A vote could be held open until the committee chairman or someone else had had a chance to muscle enough votes in order to do something that may not be in the public interest. That is a very, very bad way to legislate. In fact, it is one of the worst features of this package, because it totally abandons any sense of a deliberative process for considering legislation.

If you put the idea of committee meetings while the House is in session together with a rolling quorum, let me give you the kind of scenario that could develop. What you could have is a committee meeting amending a bill, the chairman may not be very happy with the amendments taking place to his bill, and all of a sudden the bells ring in the committee room designating the fact that there is going to be a vote on the House floor on an amendment.

The members of the committee have 15 minutes to come and vote on the House floor on that amendment, so at some point the members of the committee are going to get up and they are going to leave in order to make that House vote. After all, we are all held accountable for the votes that we make in the House of Representatives.

The chairman could decide on this particular instance he is not going to leave the committee room. Of course, only a chairman can declare a recess, so the chairman can wait until the whole room clears out of other Members, and then sit there himself and declare the bill passed, and declare a rolling quorum for the purpose of passage, thereby obliterating the chance for any other Member to offer an amendment and to change the bill.

Then the chairman could leave that vote open for a day, for a week, for a month, for a couple of months, until he rounded up enough votes by making deals of various kinds in order to move the bill out of his committee. That is a very, very bad way to legislate, but it is the kind of scenario that the Democrats have created by the rules that they passed today.

Another item that was in the rules is the one that was discussed very, very roundly today, and that was the matter of non-Member Delegates voting in the Committee of the Whole. That is also very bothersome, and I think that one will be subject to a legal constitutional challenge, because what we have now decided is that you can have people who are not from States recognized by the Union who will now be able to come to the House floor and vote in the Committee of the Whole.

It is very interesting. We heard a lot of emotional arguments out here about the need to give these people some more rights to other kinds of voting representatives in the House. It is clear that the Democrats did come up with a rather unique way of addressing this issue which really does not give these people a true right to vote, because if their vote really means anything, the Democrats, in an amendment to the rules, today took the right away from them. What the Democrats literally did was created a rule that says that "when your vote counts, it doesn't count, but when it doesn't count, it counts." That is literally the rule that ended up getting passed on the House floor today, under the guise of expanding democracy.

The fact is that they shouldn't have come up with a process that gives non-Members a vote in the first place. To give them this kind of a vote is somewhat insulting, it seems to me, and is, again, hardly democratic in the true nature of what we usually understand as democratic process.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

If I may take just a moment, Mr. Speaker, I am terribly disturbed at what seems to be the direction of this House, especially in light of all of the abuse that the House took over the last year or two. We all know, and it has been said here on the floor, that the House of Representatives and Congress in general is at the lowest that it has ever been in the minds of the American people. It is very unsettling.

I think part of that is that this kind of attitude of one squelching and squashing the minority as much as possible whenever they sting the majority or in some way make life uncomfortable for the majority, "We will just shut them up, tie their hands behind their backs, and make sure they do not have their rules, and through the rules a vehicle by which the minority can perform its function," which is to be the conscience of the House, to make sure that power is not abused. That is what makes this institution absolutely a wonderful place and a shining example of democracy, is that you have this adversarial situation so that truth is out and honesty prevails.

But over the years we have had these kinds of rules come down that has led to eventually the disrepute of this House. And everyone that went home and stood for election heard from the American people about how bad this place is, and how dishonest it is, how they want to change it in such a way that I think would make government even worse.

But what is happening here, I have to tell the gentleman I went, I did not want to see, but I thought I ought to see this movie, "The Distinguished Gentleman." I do not know if the gentleman from Pennsylvania has seen it.

Mr. WALKER. I have not seen it yet, and I want to see it one of these days.

Mr. DELAY. Eddie Murphy stars in it, and it is a dangerous movie because it misrepresents the House. But it is a movie that was made to appeal to the disgust of the American people about the House of Representatives, and it took everything in the House and misrepresented most of it, starting with our pins as elitists. And in one scene Eddie Murphy comes running in to vote, rushes out, and he is accosted by a group of children to ask him what he just voted on, and he did not know what he voted on. These rules today, and the rules that the gentleman outlined would cause even more of that situation.

Mr. WALKER. Absolutely. Let me say to the gentleman that the real concern here is that what we have done with this idea of committees meeting during the House debate is assured that even more Members are not going to have an opportunity to maybe be in their offices at least watching the proceedings on television. I mean I will give Members credit, that sometimes they are not on the House floor but they are following the debate. They may be back in their offices signing mail or doing some other kind of work. But they do have the debate on and have some basic understanding of what is taking place on the House floor, so that even though they may not be here, they are listening to the House proceedings. Under the new rules we are going to have even less of that, so we are going to have even more Members who are going to come to the floor with absolutely no idea of what is being voted on, and when they leave probably will not have any idea of what they just voted on, other than the fact that somebody stood in the back of the Chamber and said the vote is yes, we need a yes on this one.

Mr. DELAY. The gentleman brought up creating the Office of General Counsel and we would not know who the subpoenas would be issued to, and are not assured that the minority would be informed. Was there not a situation just last year, or maybe it was 2 years ago, where the House was embarrassed and added one more stone on the shoulders of disrepute of this House in a situation where subpoenas were issued in this House and they were sort of, well, they were not exactly published. No one knew that the subpoenas were there, and the House ended up being embarrassed.

Mr. WALKER. We were thoroughly embarrassed. In fact, we had a resolution on the floor basically to force the subpoenas out. I brought the resolution to the floor one day, and they basically dribbled the subpoenas out onto the floor one by one.

Mr. DELAY. Would the gentleman describe that situation so that those listening can really understand and remember how the House was embarrassed in that situation?

Mr. WALKER. Sure. What had happened was subpoenas had been issued in a matter relating to alleged criminal conduct in the House, and it was buried. The Republican leadership was not informed about it at all. And it eventually showed up in the newspapers, and we eventually found out about it, that some subpoenas were evidently on Capitol Hill through the newspapers. And when we came to the floor to ask questions about it we were told that well, you know, they may be, you know, there were a variety of interpretations. So we eventually ended up trying to do it through resolution here on the House floor. Of course, it was a privileged resolution which we are also going to be limited on under these rules.

But the point is that the House appeared as though it was engaged in a coverup. And certainly the minority was not informed. So coming off that there was assurance that any time a subpoena came to the House floor that the minority leadership would be informed.

The way that process was to take place was for the counsel and Clerk's office, as soon as the Clerk got information on this, was to inform the minority leadership. My point about this particular thing is that the counsel is no longer in the Clerk's office. The counsel may no longer know of subpoenas arriving on the Hill. And so, therefore, the deal by which we were being informed is no longer in effect, and we have received no assurances that I am aware of that there is another mechanism that has been established to assure that we will be properly informed of future subpoenas. And we do know that there are a couple of grand juries meeting now on matters relating to possible criminal conduct in the House. The House is certainly going to want to have an information flow on that. We are going to want to have a stream of information as those matters arise.

It is not clear to me that in anything that was done in the rules that the minority has any kind of guarantees of that type.

Mr. DELAY. If the gentleman will yield for a little bit longer, what the gentleman is saying, and what I read in many of the rules presented by the Democrats is that I guess they consider this reform. And in the face of the problems that we have had as an institution, this is their suggestion as to how we are going to reform this House to bring confidence back to the American people. This is a very poor effort to do that. In fact, it lends itself to even more abuses which will lead to even more disgust by the American people about this institution. And I think it is really sad that when we had the opportunity to open up and make this body a more deliberative body, I think one of our biggest problems in maintaining integrity of the institution is that we continue to shut down and strangle deliberations at all levels in this House.

Mr. WALKER. I could not agree with the gentleman more. And I would just like to make the point that I think that is one of the problems in gridlock, because I think one of the reasons why things have become so gridlocked in the Congress is because instead of having a deliberative function, what you end up with is everything in such a closed stream that no one feels as though they have had direct input, and so, therefore, things get locked in in conference committees, and things do not happen here.

It used to be when we had open rules on the House floor and could debate these matters and the resolutions came about, at least the House felt as though it had worked its will on legislation, and the deliberative function helped move legislation forward. They have taken the deliberative function away and in so doing have created gridlock, and this package of rules creates even more gridlock.

Mr. DELAY. There are all kinds of ways of maintaining the integrity of the institution. One of those ways is to have great orators debate the issues of the day that reach the American people through the media, and that way they see great debates going on and the people understand at that time that we are fully at work, that things are going on, Members are debating the issues, that there is open and free debate going on all across this Nation, through this Chamber, and that along with being able to actually change bills, work the will of bills, it shows the American people that this body actually functions. And through its functions it maintains the confidence of the American people that all is well in this institution.

What we are doing is continuing to strangle this institution. They have got both hands around the throats of this institution, and there is no way that we can increase the confidence of the American people in this institution under these kinds of rules.

Mr. WALKER. Remember there was a TV ad by Clara Peller that says, "Where's the beef?" I think one of our questions ought to be at this point is where is the change. All of these agents of change that supposedly came to the Congress were evidently co-opted because there is no change in direction represented in these rules. This is going in the same direction that we have been going. In fact, in many ways it is worse than anything we have seen before, because under this we have seen almost a total abdication of the rights of the minority. And it is really a tragic, a sad kind of situation that has developed on the House floor today.

Mr. DELAY. I will finish with this, and I know the gentleman wants to get to the whip, but I might say it is not just the minority. We are outraged for stepping on the minority, but the majority ought to actually take these rules and read them, because as the gentleman pointed out, there are things that are going to make life very uncomfortable for Members around here, majority Members that dare to speak up against their leadership, for someone to sit on the conference committee and raise a legitimate question that may be contrary to what the Speaker wants, and allow the Speaker to walk in and summarily take him off that conference committee. That is not a stepping on the minority, that is stepping on the House on both sides.

Mr. WALKER. A couple of the majority Members came to me today and said it cannot be true that we have in our rules the ability for the Speaker to literally take all Republicans off a conference committee. And I said that I am sorry, but you have not read your own rules then.

□ 1850

Because that is in fact what you have done in your rules. Now, we would hope that this Speaker would not ever do that, but the point is that you have created the legal authority by which he can do it, and when they voted for that rules package, and a large percentage of them voted for it, they voted for that kind of tyranny. I do not think they can escape then the judgment that comes from having replaced democracy with tyranny.

I will be happy to yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH].

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful to my colleagues for letting me pop in here for just a minute, because I have to go and do "Money Line," which is live at 7. But I wanted to say a couple of things, because I think that what we are doing tonight is very, very important.

In a free society, it is important to have free debate, and I think this is an example of why.

I am personally very saddened and disappointed by what happened today. I would like to cooperate with our newly elected President. He is, after all, President of the whole country. He is not the Democratic President. He is the President of the United States. I would like to have a bipartisan chance to cooperate without compromise. House Republicans proved in 1990 that if it was a matter of principle we would fight a Republican President, and certainly we would fight a Democratic President on principle, but we do not have to fight, and I think we are willing to cooperate.

But Lyndon Johnson had a great phrase. He said, "If you want me in on the landing, I want to be in on the takeoff." What he meant was, Do not come and tell us that cooperation and bipartisanship and comity are involved after you have written the rules, after you have decided the game, after you have written the legislation.

I said to several Democratic leaders today on health care, on line-item veto, on a number of issues, we Republicans are very prepared to cooperate if they will let us in the room at the beginning, not at the end.

Now, I must say, in report to my colleagues and to the country, no Republican was involved in writing the rules, not a single Republican. We were told on the floor that the gentlewoman from New York and her colleagues had worked for 6 months, that it was a long, arduous process. To the best my knowledge, not a single Republican was asked, What do you think of these? How shall we modify them? What should happen?

Mr. WALKER. Despite the fact that a task force that was put together by the Speaker some months ago where the Republicans participated in it where we raised very legitimate questions about the rules and were told that they were going to try to cooperate with us.

Mr. GINGRICH. My friend from Pennsylvania is absolutely right.

I regard this, in fact, as backsliding from the reform position we reached in September, as weakening the bipartisan effort we had for reform in September.

In addition, no Republican was consulted on allowing nontaxpaying delegates who do not pay taxes into the U.S. Treasury, who represent as few as 46,000 people, to vote on the floor of the House as though they were full-fledged States. And I think certainly none of us would have accepted that.

But let me carry it a step further. I believe, and we are going to check this tomorrow, and we will report to the House, I believe that the 27 votes against their own party's rules by some Democrats is the largest number of Democrats to vote no in modern times on a rules package, and I believe that the 221 who voted to adopt the rules is the lowest number. That is only 3 more than a constitutional majority, which is 218, that it is the lowest to vote yes on a Democratic rules package since they took control of the House in 1930.

Now, we are going to check that tomorrow to make sure, and since I am a history teacher, I do not want to mislead people, so I want to tell them. This is just based on Congressman MICHEL and Mr. Pitt's memory, and they, between them, have a pretty good institutional memory.

The point I make to my friends in the Democratic leadership is this: You barely won a procedural vote on the opening day on something which is hard to explain back home, yet even on that, you barely won. You cannot come to this House for the next 2 years on a narrowly drawn Democratic leftwing series of proposals and believe that just because your majority in your caucus is on the left that the majority on the floor is on the left.

Columnist David Broder noted the other day that there may be as many as 60 moderate Democrats who will bolt. Well, any simple arithmetic will tell you that 176 Republicans and 60 moderate Democrats is 236, 18 more than a constitutional majority.

So I would hope that one of the lessons that will come out of today for the Democratic leadership is that cooperation has to begin at the beginning. It cannot be demanded at the end.

There are two good examples coming up: the Resolution Trust Corporation refunding, $17 or $18 billion, which is going to be extraordinarily hard to pass. There need to be major reforms in the RTC, and if they try to get that through here without any cooperation on a one-sided basis, I do not see how they get 218 Democrats to walk that plank. I do not think they are going to get Republican support without tremendous deep reforms from the very beginning. The second example is the debt ceiling which my friend may know better than I, but I think probably will come up in March.

Mr. WALKER. In March is my understanding.

Mr. GINGRICH. They should not expect to come to the Republicans in the last week and say, "Gee, you have to pass this." If they want us to cooperate, and one example which our leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL], has mentioned is making in order a balanced budget amendment, making in order possibly a vote on a line-item veto, and if they want to seek any Republican cooperation on the debt ceiling, then I think they need to come early and talk honestly and openly and give us a chance in candor to negotiate a package.

I want to just say unequivocally that I do not believe Republicans are going to sit around waiting for the Democratic leadership to craft what they want to get through and then have them turn to us, twist our arms, tell us we have to be responsible for what they are doing.

Lastly, I believe for the rest of this Congress the Democrats will come to rue having allowed nontaxpaying delegates to vote on this floor.

For years President Ronald Reagan used to talk about tax-and-spend Democrats. The idea that the Democratic Party would empower four Delegates, whose areas do not send money to the U.S. Treasury, but instead send to their own States, and as I tried to say on the floor earlier, imagine if I could go home to Georgia and say that I have got this deal for you, that you get all of your income tax to the Federal Government sent back to Atlanta to the State government, you get all of your corporate income tax sent back to Atlanta to the State government, and that is what happens.

So you have Delegates all of whose taxes go to their local government who are now going to be voting as though they had the legitimate right to tell the 435 Representatives whose citizens pay the taxes that run the American Government.

Lastly, I think in the age of fairness, the idea that 46,000 people in one constituency, 133,000 in another, have the same vote as the State of Montana, which has 800,000 people is just simply an outrage. And I intend to do everything I can, and I know that my colleagues in the House Republican Conference do, to make sure that every taxpaying American, every citizen who cares about the Constitution understands every day, every time we have nontaxpaying Delegates vote on this House floor.

I want to thank my friend for this very informative and instructional review.

Again, I want to express my sadness and disappointment. I thought that this could have been a more bipartisan, a more cooperative day. I hope this is not a signal of what the Clinton Presidency is going to be like. I hope that the Democratic leadership will reconsider and reach out and work with the Republicans here in the House.

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH].

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, for yielding.

I very much appreciate his taking this special order, and I admire his dedication. Of all the people in the House, no one is more dedicated to studying the rules and how they impact on the House. I know the gentleman loves this House as we all do.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ROTH. Speaking for myself, what happened here today did not surprise me one bit. In fact, had it not happened I would have been surprised.

How many times do we have to hit our head against the wall until we finally realize what is going to happen? Arguing about the rules here on the House floor is, in my opinion, like arguing about the rules of the football game on Sunday between the Green Bay Packers and the Chicago Bears. I mean, the game is over. The other team won. That is the way the game is played. I do not think the game is played on January 5. I think the game was played on November 3 when the votes were counted.

That is why we have to go and tell the American people what has taken place. I do not feel this House is corrupt. Some of the leaders and some of the people in the House may not live up to the standards that we would like to have people live up to, but I think this is a wonderful institution.

The problem is that this institution has been run by the same party for 38 consecutive years, since 1954. Every Speaker, every chairman, every subcommittee chairman has been a Democrat.

Now people want change, and yet now we have the Democratic Party ruling everything, the White House, the House of Representatives, the Senate, the bureaucracy, all of the agencies. If we want change, then we have got to go to the precincts and get the American people to join in with us.

I think what is happening to America is deplorable. The greatness of our Nation is eroding because of all the pandering to all the special-interest groups.

That is why this 38 years of continuous rule by the Democratic Party is so terrible for this country. We have got to get that message back to the people.

□ 1900

I feel very strongly about this. When Mr. GINGRICH said 46,000 people who do not vote are going to have as much power on taxation in the votes here on the floor as all the people of Montana or all the people of North Dakota, all the people of South Dakota—this is a disgrace. But the problem is we are not going to win on the floor here as long as we have only 176 Members.

For 38 years the other party has ruled.

Mr. WALKER. Let me make one point. The gentleman is right. But to go back to his football analogy, the problem is that you would have to concentrate a little bit on what they are doing, however, because his football analogy is true, except that in this particular instance what you have is a Green Bay Packers and Chicago Bears game where the Green Bay Packers have to play by the rules written by the Chicago Bears. And what the Bears have said is if Green Bay wants to score a touchdown, what they have to do is to go up and down the field four times and then and only then can they get over the goal line. And so on.

However, if we want to score a touchdown, all we have to do us run the ball 5 yards and we get to have a touchdown.

That is the problem. It seems to me the American people have to understand the unfairness of that kind of magnitude; what you have is two teams on the floor, yes, but one is writing rules which are horribly unfair in not allowing the institution to operate functionally.

It would not make a very interesting football game, it would not make for a very good football game if in fact you have rules designed in that way. It does not make for very good legislation when you have rules written the way the slaughterhouse rules that we had before us today were written. This is, as I said before, a perversion of the process. We in fact consolidated special-interest power with many of these rules today, and I think it is really undermining some of the basic tenets of a free people.

I yield to the gentleman again.

Mr. ROTH. I thank the gentleman, and I appreciate that. I wish I would have thought of that analogy of the Green Bay Packers and the Chicago Bears. That actually is the way it is.

Mr. WALKER. You realize I would prefer to use the Philadelphia Eagles.

Mr. ROTH. The Philadelphia Eagles, that is fine. But that is the way it is.

You know, I have been analyzing this: The American people have said they want change because all they have been getting is the skim milk and the special-interest groups are getting the cream. As long as this House is going to be ruled by the same party, which it has been for 38 years, the American people are always going to get the skim milk and the special interests get the cream always.

Do you agree with that?

Mr. WALKER. Sure, because what I have looked at in these particular groups of rules is the fact that they allow for a consolidation of special-interest power. That is the reason why we end up with all of these rules around here, these are things that special-interest groups want in order to get more power for themselves. That is the reason why the Democrats wanted to add five additional votes on their side. It is a special-interest ploy. It has nothing to do with the rights of the general populace.

So, the people, you know, do not understand at times exactly the importance of all of these rules. But the fact is that by adopting the rules that we adopted today we helped the special-interest powers get their way within the legislative process.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROTH. You know, I have often said that if you have 218 Members in this House, of course that is 1 more than half, you can do anything you want except change the Constitution. I did not realize until today that if you have 218 Members plus, you could do anything, including changing the Constitution.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is absolutely right. That is why I think when we take this matter to court it may well be a matter that the courts will show a good deal more responsibility about than the House showed today.

Mr. ROTH. I have one more question and do appreciate the gentleman taking this special order and for yielding to me. It will be a short question.

If it is true that the real power lies in the precincts, public opinion and so on, and if it is true, as it is, that one party has ruled this house for 38 years—it will be 40 years in 1994—why do we not, in an educational approach, go around the country telling people what is taking place in Congress?

Let us not beat up on Congress, because I love this institution, but tell the American people how we have to change, that if you want change, you have to change the leadership, you have to change the makeup of this House.

For the last 8 years, every Speaker, every subcommittee chairman, every chairman, has been a Democrat.

So maybe in 1994 we can make a change—those changes that have to be made.

Mr. WALKER. I think we need to talk to the American people about the nature of the change that they should be for. Maybe we are helping to do that by doing this discussion on the floor tonight. Because the fact is the American people said very loud and clear this year that they wanted change. What they did not understand is that when they voted that way and they voted for people who wanted change, they in fact voted for people then who came to Washington and immediately decided they wanted to be a part of the system rather than change the system.

So that got reflected in a lot of votes. Now, I will say, as the whip pointed out, 27 Democrats broke with their party today on the House floor. That is very unusual. What that means is that a large number of that new freshman class on the Democratic side who came to Washington to bring about change in fact capitulated to the system, voted for the rules package, voted with the Democrats on every procedural vote and in fact did nothing to institute change. They are going to want to come back later on and talk about all the things that could change the system. But the fact is they want to come back later on and talk about all the things, all the things that they are doing to change the system, but the fact is they took a walk on changing the system today when they had their real chance to really make democracy work in the House. The American people need to have some feel for what real change involves. Real change involves taking on your leadership from time to time, it involves standing up for principle from time to time, it involves doing the hard things and not just the easy things from time to time; it involves really making and taking a stand on principle on the opening day of Congress when it is sometimes the toughest time to do it.

That is not what we saw happen here today. What we saw was a capitulation to the old kind of cronyism that resulted in the bad rules that we have had previously and we built upon those bad rules with even worse rules today.

Let me at this time yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I agree with the gentleman's comments and the comments of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH], which have been right on point. I think the most egregious damage done today has been done not just to the process in the House nor to the Members of Congress but to the taxpayers of this Nation. The biggest problem that faces this country, and I think that was manifest in all of the Presidential debates, is the deficit.

I think Ross Perot pointed out during the debates, one of the Presidential debates, that all of the taxpayers west of the Mississippi basically pay their income taxes simply to the interest on the national debt; that the sum of all of their taxes paid amounts to the interest that we pay on the national deficit; not for defense, not for roads and highways, not for health care, but just going to interest.

And the whole idea of the debate over the budget deficit over the last 4 or 5 years has been to balance benefits with burden. That is, if you vote to have more roads and highways and you are a Representative who does that, you know that your taxpayers are going to be saddled with higher taxes or you are going to have a bigger deficit that your taxpayers will ultimately have to meet and at least have to pay interest on.

Now, the Democrat majority has moved away from that professed concern that they talked about during the Presidential campaign, during the last congressional campaign, they have moved away from that deficit concern and they have said, "We are now going to let people spend money who do not have to pay any taxes," because every one of those 47,000 citizens now in American Samoa is now the most powerful voter in this country or its territories.

Mr. WALKER. How many people are there in the gentleman's district?

Mr. HUNTER. In my district, during the reapportionment time and earlier this year, it was exactly 572,308 people.

Mr. WALKER. That is about the size of my district. All of our districts are somewhere in the range of 565,000 to 570,000 people. That is about what it is, except for States like Montana, which have only 1 Representative and 800,000 people.

Mr. ROTH. That is right. I have a question. The question is this: We have territories. Why do we have these territories? Why do we not let the Virgin Islands and Samoa go their own way? Why are we paying all kinds of tax dollars into these territories? Let the territories have their freedom.

In other parts of the world people are fighting for their freedom. Why do we not say to the territories, "Hey, you are a free and independent sovereign nation, you have the laws unto yourself," let the territories and these other entities just go their own way. Why do we want the territories?

Mr. HUNTER. To answer the gentleman, if you offered to the citizens of the territories the prospect of paying American income taxes or going their own way, I do not think there would be any question but that they would decide to go their own way.

Mr. ROTH. We are the Members of Congress. Why do we not, speaking for the American people, say, "If you want to go your own way," go your own way?"

Mr. WALKER. The alternative, in the case of Puerto Rico and the District of Columbia, where the people looked at potential statehood, in the case of the District of Columbia, turning back to the State of Maryland, doing things like that. There are certainly some other options.

□ 1910

Mr. ROTH. If I could just ask, why do we not debate that issue?

I think if we took a survey, I go around this country, I talk to people, I do not think the American people would be upset if we said to the Virgin Islands, "You can go your own way and have your autonomy and do your own thing," and to Samoa and to these other areas. Why do we not do that?

Mr. HUNTER. Well, if the gentleman would allow me to answer that, at this point the Democrat majority of this House has made the decisions, one that would be very easily acted on by the citizens of these territories, because they have essentially given super majority status, if you will, to every one of the voters, every one of those 47,000 citizens, for example, in the American Samoa. Each of those citizens now has in excess of 10 times the voting power of a citizen of the average congressional district and he does it without having to pay any taxes to fund the projects that his Representative votes for; so you now have placed the Democrat majority which talked about controlling deficits and talked about accountability and talked about paying the piper, has now added a number of voters, the thousands of voters who are represented by the five Representatives who now have acquired the right to vote on the floor of the House of Representatives. They have now given those people the right to the vote for expenditures for themselves and for others that they will not have to pay for.

The idea that every benefit carries a burden is one that we have been trying to imbue in this Congress for the last 5 or 10 years.

Democrats and Republicans have said:

> Wait a minute. Every time you vote a benefit in for the American people, that carries with it a tax burden.

And now the Democratic majority has just pushed all of that aside. They have said tax and spend, not only are we going to tax and spend, we are going to vote to have spenders who are not taxed, and that is going to be bad news for every one of the taxpayers, every single taxpayer in this country who does have to pay taxes. The median family in this country pays about 6,000 bucks a year in income taxes. That is the average two-wage earner family. That person now is going to see his tax money expended by people who pay no taxes and have an obligation only to their people, who of course want projects, want benefits, and as the whip eloquently stated, if every Representative could go back to his State and say:

> You know, we have a lot of projects here. I want to know if you want me to vote for them. Incidentally, there is no price tag on these projects, because we don't pay a dime for them. Now, do you want them?

Of course, the answer is going to be yes, and of course any politician who walks out on this floor and says:

> I come from a territory that pays no income taxes and I feel compelled to vote for a balanced budget because I don't want to raise the taxes of people who live in Montana.

That person is quickly going to be replaced by a delegate who will vote for benefits, because no taxes are going to be paid by the people who elect that person to the House of Representatives.

Mr. ROTH. I just have one question. The gentleman is a Member of the leadership and very well versed and conversant with all these issues. What the gentleman says is absolutely correct.

But the question I have is, what are we going to do about it? I mean, just to be here on the floor and talk about it is not enough. I think we have got to go into the precincts and tell the American people what is taking place.

We had a revolution 200 years ago, taxes without representation. Now you have representation without taxes.

I mean, this is the epitome of stupidity. No wonder the American people are upset with what is going on in the Congress.

I think this is why we have got to have a new approach. I think we can bring about the change. I think the change is to go and talk directly to the American people on these issues.

Mr. HUNTER. To answer the gentleman, I think the American people are going to be as outraged about this as they were about another issue that had a very fundamental effect on them, and that was the Panama Canal issue where they felt they were losing something that they had paid for, that they had built and that they owned. In this case, it is something they worked for very hard, that is their tax dollars are going to be expended by delegates who come from territories where no taxes are paid. I think that is the idea of accountability, of tax accountability.

Mr. WALKER. Just to clarify that, no Federal taxes are paid, because what happens is they do collect taxes. I mean, we had people on the floor talking about the fact that they paid taxes. But the gentleman is right. The taxes go exclusively for the particular territory.

Many of my constituents in Pennsylvania would be very happy to have a system where all the taxes collected in Pennsylvania would be kept and spent in Pennsylvania. No money would go outside the borders of Pennsylvania. A lot of people would buy into that system immediately, and that is what is happening in the territories.

But the gentleman is right. They then have no responsibility to the overall picture, and it is the overall picture that is hundreds of billions of dollars in deficit and trillions of dollars in debt.

Mr. HUNTER. The gentleman is absolutely right, and that means that the people of these territories have no obligation to pay interest on the deficit.

Mr. WALKER. That is right.

Mr. HUNTER. And because of that, the looming deficit is not a problem for them. Essentially what we have done is we have diluted taxpayer decisionmaking from this body with this rules change today.

Mr. WALKER. Well, I thank the gentleman. I think he makes a very important point, because two clear messages came out of this campaign. The American people want something done about debt and deficit. They want more than just the deficit dealt with. They want the debt dealt with. They feel very strongly that debt is beginning to consume the country, but they also said something else interesting. That was that they wanted something done about term limits. It is interesting that the Democrats in their particular rules package could have dealt with that issue. They did not.

The only way that issue came up on the floor today was when the minority raised it. We did in fact have a vote on term limits on the floor today. I hope the American people in their ability to be educated about what went on in the House will take a look at this, because there was a vote on whether or not the terms of chairmen should be limited to three 2-year terms, thereby allowing chairmen to serve only 6 years, thereby cutting down on the abuse of power which is all too evident in these rules.

Now, many people say, "Well, that's fine. You are going to do it for the chairmen, but you don't do it for yourselves."

Yes, we do. We Republicans did not make this proposal in a vacuum. I am the ranking member of a committee. We just recently adopted rules in our own conference that will limit me to three terms as ranking member of that committee, beginning with this Congress.

Now, we have taken that step amongst ourselves. What we wanted to do was say that is something that the American people are in favor of and ought to be done in the House of Representatives, and it was turned down. So the American people now have a chance to take a look and find out which Members voted to do something substantive about term limits and which Members did not vote to do something about substantive term limits. So that issue was raised in this rules fight today.

It will be interesting to see the American people reflect on it, because it is the way they feel that abuse of power can be dealt with. They may be right. They have a chance now to evaluate who was who and what was what on the House floor.

The gentleman from California makes a very valid point. We were also making a fundamentally important decision about how debt and deficit was going to be dealt with. The rules we adopted today, not only in the case of delegates, but in the way in which the rules limit the ability of Members to bring issues to the floor will undermine our ability to deal with the debt and deficit problem.

I think that we have dealt a major blow in these rules to any hope of bringing debt and deficit under control in the next 2 years. I hope I am wrong, but I will tell you that as I read these rules, it is going to be very, very difficult for us, for instance, to offer amendments on the floor to limit spending, because these rules take away our ability to offer those kind of amendments.

They also then add these new votes out there that can be used to stop that kind of amendment from taking place.

So this is an undermining of our ability to deal with those things which the American people said in this election were the most important to them. That is the reason why it was a somewhat sad and tragic day on the House floor, because we did not do what the American people said that they wanted done. We did not change. We simply moved in a direction that we have been moving before, a direction toward I believe more disrespect and disrepute with the House of Representatives.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I have got an idea. Three Congressmen are going to resign very shortly because of taking jobs in the administration in the Cabinet. We are going to have special elections. The gentleman is a member of the leadership and can advise candidates and so on. Why do we not go into these three areas, for example, talk about this, about the rules and so on and see what kind of response we do get from the American people.

One of those special elections will be held in Wisconsin. It would be an interesting test case to go to the American people and tell them this is what is happening. What are your reactions to a House that has been ruled for 38 continuous years, every single year, since 1954. Thirty-eight consecutive years the Democrats have ruled this House, and I think not only would we be doing an important function for this House, but we would be doing I think a civics lesson for Americans.

□ 1920

Mr. WALKER. It is important we also though find candidates who will be then real agents of change. I mean we, as Republicans, have a responsibility in all of this, too, and that is to go out and recruit the candidate who will come to Washington and be a true agent of change, will not get captured by the system themselves, but will come here and really be determined to vote in the directions of reducing debt and deficit, of dealing with the problems of abuse of power, of dealing with the issues of term limits and other things that are on the minds of the American people. So, a part of this is not only taking the message into those districts, but getting the kinds of candidates who can basically personify those issues in the districts, and I hope we are able to do that.

INTRODUCTION OF THE SMALL BUSINESS INVESTMENT ACT OF 1993

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, three out of four jobs created in the United States in the next 25 years will be created by small business.

Between December of 1989 and December 1990, small businesses increased employment by 560,000. Large business employment declined by 390,000 during that same period.

Twentieth-century small business innovations include: air conditioning, the airplane, the heart valve, the helicopter, the optical scanner, the pacemaker, the personal computer, the Polaroid camera, soft contact lenses, and the zipper.

Why do I mention these facts? Because, Mr. Speaker, they illustrate the profound impact that small business has on our nation. Our future growth will be secure only if we protect and promote our small business sector.

Today, BILL ARCHER, the ranking Republican on the Ways and Means Committee; JAN MEYERS, the ranking Republican on the Small Business Committee; and I are introducing the Small Business Investment Act of 1993. This comprehensive small business tax reform plan will ease the Federal burden that now handicaps our small business sector by greatly simplifying tax compliance for these companies.

This proposal:

Allows companies to expense up to $2,500 of start up costs;

Expands the current expense limit of equipment cost from $10,000 to $25,000;

Includes alternative minimum tax relief;

Increases the permitted number of S corporation shareholders from 35 to 50.

Proposes inflation adjusted inventory FIFO accounting;

Offers relief from capitalization rules.

Offers relief from complex long-term accounting rules.

For our Nation to thrive over the next several decades, it must have a strong small business component. If small businesses were able to reduce the time and resources spent on annual record keeping, preparation of tax returns, and compliance with other federal regulations, they could spend more time and resources on actual business transactions. The result would be more successful small businesses, better economic growth and higher employment.

I urge all of my colleagues to join us in this effort to help the small businesses of our Nation. Our Nation's future depends on it.

I am inserting at this point a letter that Representatives ARCHER, MEYERS, and I sent to President-elect Clinton on December 9, 1992, and a comprehensive description of the provisions of the Small Business Investment Act of 1993.

OFFICE OF THE REPUBLICAN LEADER,
Washington, DC, December 9, 1992.

President-Elect BILL CLINTON,
105 West Capitol, Suite 400, Little Rock, AR.

DEAR PRESIDENT-ELECT CLINTON: When the 103rd Congress convenes on January 5, we will introduce a comprehensive small business tax reform initiative which would greatly simplify tax compliance for small businesses. The current tax compliance and regulatory burdens inhibit the growth of small businesses where we have traditionally seen the largest number of jobs created.

If small businesses were able to reduce the time spent on annual recordkeeping and preparation of tax returns, they could spend more time and resources on actual business transactions. They would see greater economic return which could be turned into greater investment and more jobs for Americans.

The specifics of this proposal include: allowing expensing of $2,500 of start-up expenditures; expanding expensing of equipment costs from $10,000 to $25,000; alternative minimum tax relief; inflation adjusted inventory FIFO accounting; and relief from complex long-term contract accounting rules.

A summary of the proposals is enclosed. I hope that you will work with us to have these proposals enacted into law so that small business can be the engine toward stronger and sustained economic growth in our economy.

Sincerely,

ROBERT H. MICHEL,
Republican Leader.
BILL ARCHER,
Ranking Republican Member, Committee on Ways and Means.
JAN MEYERS,
Ranking Republican Member, Committee on Small Business.

SMALL BUSINESS INVESTMENT ACT OF 1993

I. INCREASE CURRENT DEDUCTION FOR CERTAIN INVESTMENTS FROM $10,000 TO $25,000

Current Law

The cost of business or income producing property that is used for more than one taxable year generally must be deducted over the useful life or recovery period for the property in determining taxable income. Under section 179, however, a taxpayer may elect to treat as an expense and deduct, in the year that eligible property is placed in service, a limited amount of the cost of the property. Eligible property generally includes tangible personal property and certain other property, and generally excludes buildings and structural components.

The total cost that may be deducted currently under section 179 is subject to two limitations, the investment limit and the taxable income limit. These limitations apply both to partnerships and each partner and to S corporations and each shareholder. Any cost not deducted under section 179 may be depreciated. The amount deducted under Section 179 is subtracted from the basis of the qualifying property. This adjusted basis is used to determine depreciation deductions.

Reasons for Change

An increase in the section 179 deduction is necessary to encourage purchases of new machinery and equipment, and thereby promote capital investment, modernization and a more rapid economic recovery. The current limit on the section 179 deduction creates complexity by requiring business with qualifying investments to depreciate the cost of the investment in excess of the investment limit.

Proposal

The maximum allowable deduction under section 179 would be increased from $10,000 to $25,000. For each dollar of cost of section 179 property in excess of $200,000 in a taxable year, the $25,000 maximum would be reduced by one dollar. Thus, no section 179 expense deduction is allowed when the cost of the eligible property exceeds $225,000.

Effects of Proposal

The proposal would reduce the cost of capital and increase cash flow, thereby providing an incentive to increase investment. It also would simplify tax reporting for certain small businesses that invest no more than $25,000 in eligible property for the taxable year. The limit on eligible investment ensures that the proposal primarily benefits smaller businesses.

II. ALLOW IMMEDIATE EXPENSING OF NEW BUSINESS START-UP COSTS

Current Law

Under current law allowable business start-up expenditures must be capitalized over at least 60 months (five years). Start-up expenditures include amounts paid or incurred with the acquisition or creation of a trade or business which precede the day the business becomes active. Excluded from the capitalization rule under current law are interest, taxes, and research and experimentation expenditures.

Reasons for Change

The requirement to capitalize business start-up costs creates a disincentive to invest or engage in small business activities. Direct expensing of a portion of the costs connected with a new business will lower the cost of capital associated with a start-up business and encourage job creation.

Proposal

Effective for expenditures made after December 31, 1992, the immediate write-off of up to $2,500 would be permitted to a qualified taxpayer for front-end costs of organizing a new small business that would otherwise be subject to capitalization. A qualified taxpayer would expect or know that the new small business would have gross receipts of less than $500,000 in its first full year of operation.

Effects of Proposal

The proposal would encourage start-up activities by lowering the after tax cost of starting up a small business.

III. EXEMPT SMALL BUSINESSES FROM ALTERNATIVE MINIMUM TAX

Current Law

Under current law, a corporation is subject to an alternative minimum tax (AMT) which is payable to the extent that the corporation's tentative minimum tax exceeds its regular income tax liability. The tentative minimum tax generally equals 20 percent of the corporation's alternative minimum taxable income. Alternative minimum taxable income is the corporation's taxable income increased by its tax preferences and modified for certain adjustments that redetermine the tax treatment of certain items to eliminate the deferral of income resulting from the regular tax treatment of those items. A corporation is entitled to reduce its regular income tax liability by a credit (the minimum tax credit) which is generally based on AMT paid in preceding years.

Unincorporated businesses and S corporations are not subject to AMT, but the individual alternative minimum tax may apply to their owners on preferences and adjustments deriving from the business. The tax rate on an individual's alternative minimum taxable income is 24 percent.

Reasons for Change

There is concern that the complexity of the corporate and individual AMTs impose a significant burden on small businesses. Small businesses are less likely to have the sophisticated accounting systems and expertise that are important in complying with the AMT.

In addition, because of their size and limited access to equity and debt financing, small businesses are likely to face higher costs of capital than larger firms. The individual and corporate minimum taxes, which raise the cost of capital, may discourage new investments by small business.

Proposal

For any taxable year during which a taxpayer is a "qualified small business taxpayer," certain business-related adjustments and preferences with respect to "any qualified small business activity" would not be taken into account for any purposes in computing alternative minimum taxable income. A qualified small business taxpayer is any taxpayer engaged in a qualified small business activity. A qualified small business activity with respect to a taxpayer includes any trade or business activity conducted by an individual, sole proprietorship, partnership, or corporation for which a $1,000,000 gross receipts test is satisfied in all prior taxable years beginning after December 31, 1992.

A person or entity meets the $1,000,000 gross receipts test for a prior taxable year if the average annual gross receipts of such person or entity for the 3 taxable-year period ending with such prior taxable year does not exceed $1,000,000. Aggregation and related party rules similar to those in section 448(c) would apply in making the average annual gross receipts determination.

Business-related adjustments and preferences that would not be taken into account with respect to a qualified small business activity include: (1) the adjustments for depreciation, mining exploration and development costs, long-term contracts, pollution control facilities, installment sales on certain property, circulation and R&E expenditures, and adjusted current earnings (ACE); and (2) the preferences for depletion, intangible drilling costs, bad debts, and accelerated depreciation. Other preferences and adjustments, including those viewed as personal or investment-related, would still be taken into account under the proposal.

Effects of Proposal

The proposal would simplify tax accounting for both incorporated and unincorporated small businesses and their owners. It would also reduce the cost of capital for small business.

IV. INCREASE MAXIMUM NUMBER OF SHAREHOLDERS OF AN S CORPORATION

Current Law

A small business corporation may elect to be treated as an S corporation. Income and losses of an S corporation are generally passed through to its shareholders and taxed at the shareholder level rather than at the corporate level. A small business corporation may not have more than 35 shareholders. For this purpose, a husband and wife (and their estates) are counted as one shareholder.

Reasons for Change

Increasing the maximum number of shareholders in an S corporation from 35 to 50 will facilitate the use of the subchapter S provisions by more small businesses.

Explanation of Provision

The maximum number of shareholders permitted for a corporation to qualify for, and maintain, S corporation status is increased from 35 to 50. The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

V. ALLOW SMALL BUSINESS TO ELECT INFLATION-ADJUSTED FIFO INVENTORY RULES

Current Law

The two inventory cost flow assumptions generally used by taxpayers in determining their cost of goods sold and taxable income are the FIFO and the LIFO methods. Under the FIFO (or "first-in first-out") method, it is assumed that inventories are disposed of in the order in which they are produced or acquired by the taxpayer.

Taxpayers are also permitted to use the LIFO (or "last-in first-out") method, under which it is assumed that the last goods produced or acquired by the taxpayer are the first goods sold by the taxpayer in any taxable year. Thus, LIFO reflects income from inventory sales more accurately during periods of inflation than FIFO, thus resulting in a better matching of current costs of goods sold with revenues. The LIFO method does not, however, permanently eliminate the effects of inflation, but only defers those effects generally until such time as the taxpayer reduces or liquidates its inventories.

Reasons for Change

In periods of inflation, the FIFO method may result in charges to cost of goods sold that are not reflective of the actual economic cost that the taxpayer had to incur to acquire or produce the goods in the current year. Because of the complexity of LIFO accounting, and because section 472 of the Code requires that a taxpayer using LIFO for tax purposes must also use LIFO for financial accounting purposes, many smaller taxpayers hesitate to use the LIFO method. Additionally, the LIFO method has been the source of much conflict between taxpayers and the IRS, given the wide divergence of specific LIFO inventory practices.

Proposal

The proposal would permit taxpayers with gross receipts under $10 million to elect to use an inflation-adjusted FIFO method. Taxpayers making this election would continue to use the FIFO method as permitted under present law, but inventories would be indexed (and cost of goods sold would be increased) using inflation adjustment factors based on the Consumer Price Index.

Effects of Proposal

The adoption of this proposal would provide a much-needed alternative to the LIFO method for small taxpayers who are unable to understand the LIFO computations, unwilling to use the LIFO method for GAAP purposes, or unwilling to subject themselves to potential disputes with the IRS over the use of the LIFO method. The inflation-adjusted FIFO method would result in a permanent increase in the cost of goods sold (and accordingly a permanent decrease in taxable income) for small businesses with inventories. The resulting taxable income measure would more closely reflect real economic income.

VI. EXEMPT SMALL BUSINESS FROM THE UNIFORM CAPITALIZATION RULES

Current Law

Producers of property generally may not deduct currently the costs incurred in producing property. In order that income be measured accurately, such cost must be capitalized and recovered through an offset to sales receipts (if the property is produced for sale) or through depreciation deductions (if the property is produced for the taxpayer's own use in a business or investment activity).

Section 263A of the Code generally provides a uniform set of rules that governs the capitalization of costs associated with either the purchase and resale of inventories, or the production of real or tangible personal property (whether produced for sale or for use in the taxpayer's business). Section 263A requires the capitalization of both direct and indirect costs associated with these resale and production activities.

Direct costs subject to capitalization include direct material costs and direct labor costs. Indirect costs that must be capitalized generally include amounts incurred for such items as maintenance and repair, utilities, equipment rentals, tools and equipment not capitalized, supervisory labor, pension and other employee benefit expenses relating to both current and past service, indirect materials, quality control, non-income taxes, depreciation (to the extent allowed under the Code), depletion (whether or not it is in excess of cost), rework labor, scrap and spoilage, bidding activity, engineering and design activity, production-period interest, and other general and administrative activities to the extent such costs are properly allocable to particular activities. The regulations provide guidance regarding acceptable methods by which specified capitalizable costs may be allocated to specific production or resale activities.

Costs that are not required to be capitalized with respect to production or resale activities include marketing, selling, advertising, and distribution costs, bidding expenses on contracts not awarded to the taxpayer, research and experimental expenses, losses deductible under section 165 of the Code, depreciation on temporarily idle equipment, income taxes, strike costs, repair expenses that do not relate to the manufacture or production of property, and general expenses that are not incurred by reason of a particular production activity (e.g., those costs associated with general business planning, general financial accounting, internal audit, tax return preparation, shareholder and public relations, and general economic analysis and forecasting).

Section 263A does not apply to inventories acquired for resale by small businesses with gross receipts of $10 million or less (computed as a three year moving average).

Reasons for Change

Generally accepted accounting principles (GAAP) used for financial reporting purposes require less extensive capitalization of indirect cost than do the section 263A rules. Because of the disparity between GAAP and tax treatment, several costly and burdensome cost allocations are required solely for the purpose of computing tax liability. This accounting burden could be eliminated for those least able to deal with the compliance burden by expanding the current section 263A exemption for small business resellers to all small business producers.

Proposal

The proposal generally would provide that the uniform capitalization rules do not apply to any taxpayer with gross receipts of $10 million or less. In addition, smaller taxpayers with gross receipts of $1 million or less generally would be required to capitalize only direct costs attributable to production or resale activities.

Effects of Proposal

An exemption from the section 263A uniform capitalization rules for small producers would allow these taxpayers to capitalize costs under the more liberal set of capitalization rules in existence prior to the enactment in 1986 of section 263A, and would reduce the disparity in the tax treatment between small business resellers and other small businesses. Small producers generally would be subject to the full absorption method regulations contained in section 1.471-11. Those regulations do not require the allocation and capitalization of several cost categories for which cost capitalization is required under section 263A.

VII. EXEMPT SMALL BUSINESS FROM THE LONG-TERM CONTRACT RULES

Current Law

Section 460 generally governs the tax accounting treatment of long-term contracts. Under current law, taxable income from such contracts is generally determined under the percentage of completion method (PCM) of accounting. Under this method, the contractor is entitled to deduct all costs allocated to the contract in the year in which they are incurred, but must recognize income based on an estimate of the revenues to be realized on the contract attributable to the year's activities. This estimate is generally determined by multiplying the expected contract price by the ration of actual costs incurred during the year to the total expected costs of the contract.

Taxpayers must generally perform a recomputation at the end of the contract, based on actual contract price and actual contract cost date, of the income that would have been recognized in each taxable year of the contract if actual rather than estimated data were used in such years. This recomputation, known as the look-back method, results in either an interest charge to the taxpayer or an interest payment to the taxpayer based on the underpayment or overpayment of taxes in prior years.

All costs which directly benefit or are incurred by reason of the long-term contract activities of the taxpayer are allocated to those contracts. These costs are identified in regulation section 1.451-3 and are similar to those costs required to be capitalized under the uniform capitalization rules of section 263A of the Code.

Statutory exceptions from section 460 exist for certain construction contracts. Some of these provisions allow the exempted taxpayer to use the completed contract method (CCM) of accounting, while others require a combination of CCM and PCM. For example, a construction contract which is estimated to be completed within a two-year period is entirely exempt from the PCM requirement, provided that the contractor has average annual gross receipts of $10 million or less (as computed over the prior three year period).

Under CCM, all revenues and costs allocated to the long-term contract are deferred, and are recognized only upon completion of the contract. The costs allocated to a long-term contract are determined under rules that require both direct and indirect costs of the long-term contract to be capitalized to the contract and deferred.

Reasons for Change

Accounting for long-term contracts under the section 460 percentage of completion (PCM) method results in a number of complexities for small contractors.

Proposal

The proposal would expand the current exemption from section 460 requirements to any long-term contract being performed by a contractor with average gross receipts under $10 million. In addition, contractors with gross receipts under $1 million would only be required to allocate and capitalize direct contract costs under the completed contract method (or under an inventory method of accounting).

Effects of Proposal

An exemption from the section 460 rules would allow small contractors to use the completed contract method (CCM) for computing taxable income and generally would not require the allocation of costs to contracts under the uniform capitalization rules.

The proposal would lessen the accounting burden on small business contractors. Eliminating this burden for small business could benefit emerging high-technology companies doing long-term contract work and encourage the production of new technologies by such small businesses

(Mark one square only)

IDENTIFICATION NUMBER

Is this an Amendment? ☐ YES ☐ NO

NOTE on ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

☐ CHECK IF ADDRESS IS DIFFERENT THAN PREVIOUSLY REPORTED

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE on ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER —State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE on ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, ☐ place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description, (b) quantity distributed, (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and, if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly Report." ◆

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

IDENTIFICATION NUMBER____________________

Is this an Amendment?
☐ YES ☐ NO

NOTE on ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

☐ CHECK IF ADDRESS IS DIFFERENT THAN PREVIOUSLY REPORTED

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE on ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER —State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE on ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have ☐ terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description, (b) quantity distributed, (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed.)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and, if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly Report."◆

STATEMENT OF VERIFICATION

NOTE on ITEM "D."—(a) IN GENERAL. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—§ 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In general. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multi-purpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In general. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

Is this an Amendment?

IDENTIFICATION NUMBER

NOTE on ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

☐ CHECK IF ADDRESS IS DIFFERENT THAN PREVIOUSLY REPORTED

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE on ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER

—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE on ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, ☐ place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description, (b) quantity distributed, (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed.)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and, if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly Report."◆

STATEMENT OF VERIFICATION

NOTE on ITEM "D."—(a) IN GENERAL. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—§ 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In general. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multi-purpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In general. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.
